Well-Drilling Plan Ignores Ag Security Area

Farmer Opposes Township Proposal

DAVE LEFEVER

EPHRATA (Lancaster Co.) — A local township's plans to drill a well on a dairy farm are unlawful, according to a Pennsylvania Farm Bureau (PFB) attorney.

Paul B. Zimmerman and his wife Lena are owners of the dairy farm near Ephrata where the drilling site for a test well has been marked. The Zimmermans' son, Paul Jr., manages the herd of 65 cows known as Cocalico Holsteins on the farm.

The Zimmerman family owns about 50 acres of cropland, plus pastureland and land on which buildings are situated.

If the proposed test well is judged successful and put into

The farm is part of 500 acres on eight farms in the township that applied for Ag Security Area protection in 2000. According to John Bell, attorney with the Pennsylvania Farm Bureau, the Ag Security Area was automatically approved by law 180 days after the application. Photo by Dave Lefever

Landisville Research Farm Hires New Manager

DAVE LEFEVER
Lancaster Farming Staff

LANDISVILLE (Lancaster Co.) — Pennsylvania native Dr. Dave Johnson has returned to his home state to manage Penn State's Southeastern Research and Extension Center in Landisville.

Johnson will serve as scientist in charge and manager at the center, filling the position left by John Yocum on his recent retirement. Yocum served 41 years at the research farm.

A Delaware County native, Johnson first developed an interest in agriculture as a boy, spending summers on the Westmoreland County dairy farm of his grandfather, Calvin Pollins.

Johnson was graduated from Penn State with a bachelor's degree in agronomy in 1984. He went on to earn a doctorate at the University of Arkansas in 1992.

After completing his university education, Johnson went to work developing herbicides for American Cyanamid, now BASF, a multinational chemical firm. He was employed with the company for 10 years before accepting the position at Landisville.

Johnson is experienced in both the laboratory and the field. He spent his first four years with American Cyanamid in its New Jersey laboratories, then traveled to Minnesota to perform research in the field for six years. His focus has been on controlling weeds in row crops.

Johnson said this season's research at Landisville will include working with corn that has been genetically altered with a Bt (Bacillus thuringiensis) gene to control corn rootworm. While Bt corn targeted at European corn borer has been on the market since 1996, Bt corn for rootworm was only recently registered by Monsanto.

According to Matt Antos, a Pennsylvania Corn Growers Association director and Pioneer representative, much remains to be seen about the overall benefits of Bt corn for rootworm.

While the "efficacy looks outstanding" for the new corn, Antos said there are still questions about income advantages, how hybrids will perform with the gene, and what refuge requirements will be necessary for the new genetically engineered corn.

Senate Confirms Wolff As Ag Secretary

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Early this week, Gov. Edward G. Rendell commended the Pennsylvania State Senate for confirming Dennis C. Wolff as agriculture secretary.

"Dennis brings a lifetime of agriculture and business experience to the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture," Rendell said. "He is an asset to our agricultural community and is committed to the pursuit of economic development and education as we strive to build a new Pennsylvania."

"Agriculture is vital to Pennsylvania's economy, and I am honored and excited to serve as the secretary of agriculture," Wolff said. "I have always been interested in public service and being an advocate for agriculture. It's definitely beneficial to have been on the receiving end of programs and regulations for a number of years, because I have a greater understanding of how some of these programs actually impact the rural community."

Wolff said agriculture faces many challenges in the 21st century. However, he said he is confident that, with the assistance of the agriculture community, Pennsylvania General Assembly,

Compared to Thursday, the bulk of the Choice slaughter steers sold steady. Buyer interest was very good on Monday on all grades as a firmer undertone was noted on the Choice and Prime cattle; with the lower quality grades trading up to 1 00 higher. Buyer participation was still relatively good on Tuesday, but the demand was not as great for the Select stock. There may be a heavy 15 cent discount on Select cattle in the packing house but it sure is not apparent in the sale barn as Select steers are bringing as much as 77.00; while Prime steers trade in the 80.00-83.00 range. Many local feeders have flat run out of feed, and most are opting to go ahead and send them to town as Select or low Choice cattle instead of paying to run more corn through them and have them still bring about the same money on the hoof with 1000-2000 more pounds on them. Holstein steers sold 1.00 to instances of 2.00 higher in the Choice supply. The slaughter heifer supply was light, and a trend was not established. Breaking and Boning cows sold a full 1.00 lower when compared to Thursday's active trade. Lean slaughter cows sold weak to 1.00 lower. While the early week markets may be lower, the demand for cows is still very good; especially late in the week when buyer attendance increases. The runs are lightening up in Lancaster County as more farmers head back to the fields to plant corn, and are turning their cows out on the green grass pastures With the price of dressed beef remaining high, it only makes sense for cow plants to pay more for the fleshy cows as they can use the middle meat cuts out of their fleshier cows, instead of grinding them. There were not enough slaughter bulls on offer to test the market. The two-day supply included 343 head of steers, 44 heifers, 323 cows, 15 bulls, with 12 head of feeder cattle.

However, prices trended near steady when compared to last Tuesday. Graded Holstein heifers sold sharply higher as they were able to break the 400.00 mark due to the light supply and good buyer interest. Compared to Tuesday, slaughter steers sold unevenly steady. However, the bulk of the run, especially a very good test of Choice steers, sold weak to .50 lower. There was some firmness noted at times on the high quality stock, but it was only on isolated sales. Live weights continue to be below normal, as most of the steers are weighing from 1100-1300 lbs; regardless of their finish. It's a shame to see some of the reputation cattle feeders in the county being forced to ship their steers to town because they have run out of feed. Most of the producers usually finish a high Choice or Prime steer that weighs from 1350-1450 lbs, which makes it easy for the buyers who are after the high quality stock. However, despite the feed situation, producers are still able to put some pretty good finish on them; and packers have grown a little more patient as they sit through a 700 head run looking to put two pot loads of the good kind together. Holstein steers sold 1.00-2.00 lower, and experienced their first set back in months. The quality of the Holstein supply was average to good, with only a few packages of hard finished steers which sold closer to steady. There were not enough slaughter heifers early in the week to trend the late week run. Breaking and Boning slaughter cows sold 1.00-2.00 higher, with the bulk of the increase on the 65-75 percent lean supply. Lean slaughter cows sold 50-1 00 higher. Buyer attendance and interest were both very good. Slaughter bulls sold with a weaker undertone when compared to the very light Tuesday run The supply included 718 head of steers, 74 heifers, 432 cows, 90 bulls, with 180 head of feeder cattle

The OLD FARMER'S ALMANAC THIS WEEK WITH

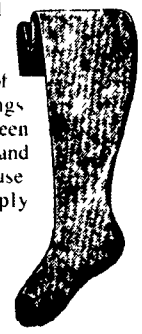
A NEW THING

On May 15, 1940, women queued up for hours before stores opened, just to be sure of getting their share of a new women's-wear commodity—nylon stockings. Thanks to public relations fanfare (exaggerated claims that a pair of stockings would 'last forever') and limited stock, hosiery departments were stampeded and near-riots broke out. By the end of the year, 36 million pairs of stockings made with the new miracle fiber had been sold. Silk stockings became obsolete, and the term stockings itself fell into disuse. Instead, women called them simply "nylons."



Eat to please thyself, but dress to please others.

TIP OF THE WEEK

ROYAL BROCCOLI CASSEROLE

2 cups chopped cooked broccoli
1 large onion, chopped
2 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon tarragon or marjoram
1/8 teaspoon pepper
1 pint sour cream

Preheat oven to 325°F. Put broccoli into a buttered 1-quart casserole dish. In a separate pan, sauté onion in butter until soft, then add to broccoli. Blend remaining ingredients together, then add to broccoli, mixing well and smoothing the top. Cover and bake for 25 minutes.

Makes 4 servings

OPINION

Mortgage 'Burnout'

Lancaster County, home to the number one cash crop, tobacco, faces a dismal future for tobacco growers.

How often have we seen or heard that type of opening paragraph to stories about the future of tobacco farming in Pennsylvania?

What once was the county's number one cash crop, what growers called the "mortgage burner," can't even be grown anymore! Colleges such as Penn State have been warning growers to step away from growing tobacco and to grow produce or some other niche-market crop.

(Problem is, if too many people grow the "niche-market crop," it's no longer a niche market. Then what do you do?)

Last week we reported that Vector Tobacco, a North Carolina company that contracted tobacco in the county and guaranteed $1.50 per pound, no longer needs a crop this season. We've heard reports that many growers have depended heavily on the sale of the tobacco to do what tobacco used to do best in the county: get rid of mortgage and other farm debts. In the early 1990s, at the Paradise Tobacco Auction, we reported prices as high as $1.60 or more per pound! — that went a long way toward getting rid of farm debt.

Vector, processed by Trileaf Tobacco out of New Holland, worked to provide tobacco for the Quest brand of low- and no-nicotine cigarettes sold in seven states. Though Quest is going well, according to a company spokesperson, Vector has enough supply and doesn't need tobacco from Lancaster County or anywhere in Pennsylvania.

We have witnessed the death of this mini-industry. Just to provide the scope of this death, we turned to the Pennsylvania Agricultural Statistics Service (PASS) and came up with numbers from 1980 until the present, in terms of just how widespread, alarming, and severe the

To Begin Scouting For Alfalfa Weevil

The late spring season this year has impacted the development of crops and insects. Insects that normally feed on crops are developing later by the calendar than last year.

Alfalfa weevils are beginning to feed on the new alfalfa crop. The population of economic significance results from eggs laid in the spring by overwintering adults. These adults move into hay fields containing alfalfa as soon as the plants begin to grow and lay their eggs in the stems of plants.

The weevil eggs normally hatch between mid-April and early May. Larvae hatching from these eggs reach maturity in approximately three weeks, normally from late May to early June. Injury symptoms are usually most evident during mid- to late May. Once the larvae pupate, they are done feeding for the year and scouting efforts can cease.

For this reason, scouting for this pest only needs to occur during the first growth period (first cutting) of alfalfa. However, in fields where high numbers of weevil are present at cutting, the stubble should be checked to assure that regrowth is not being prevented by larvae feeding on the new shoots.

Begin scouting the warmest fields on your operation with a southern exposure and those with a soil type that is susceptible to drought. Begin scouting all fields once evidence of alfalfa weevil injury is observed in the warmest fields or when 300 degree days (base threshold of development equals 48 degrees Fahrenheit) have accumulated since Jan. 1. This will typically occur between May 1 and May 15 in most years and at most locations in the state.

To sample a field, carry a bucket (a 2- or 3-gallon plastic bucket will do fine) and walk through the field in either a "W" or "zigzag" pattern. Randomly remove an entire stem from 30 locations at approximately equal intervals to obtain a good representative sample of the field. When collecting an alfalfa stem sample, carefully cup your hand around the top of the stem before removing it. This will prevent any larvae from dropping off that may have been on the stem. Now, remove the stem at ground level and place it top first into the bucket. Repeat this procedure as you follow your pattern across the field.

After you have collected 30 stems in the bucket, separate them into 3 to 4 small bundles and beat each bundle 10 or 15 times against the inside of the bucket to dislodge the larvae from the stems. We are primarily interested in the large larvae (green in color and ¼ inch long), since the big ones do the most feeding. In most cases only the large larvae are easily dislodged from the plant. Smaller larvae tend to hide in leaflet collars and are difficult to dislodge. Count all the larvae in the bucket, including the small cream-colored ones. Record this number on your field data sheet.

Next, measure 10 of the stems to get an average height of the plants (in inches) in the field. Record the average height of the plants on your data sheet. Also, observe the stems and record the percentage with buds. The number of flower buds present will help you decide whether to spray or harvest the field if weevil larvae numbers are near the economic threshold and the field is near the harvesting stage of development. If the field is in full bud when the economic threshold is reached, early cutting is usually the best pest management alternative.

More detailed information on economic thresholds can be found on the Penn State Entomology Website at (http://www.cas.psu.edu/docs/CASDEPT/IPM/FldCrop/table17.htm), in the Field Crop IPM Training and Reference Manual, or the publication "A Pest Management Program For Alfalfa In Pennsylvania." Check with your local cooperative extension office for copies of the publications.

To Apply Fungicides To Strawberries

Gray mold for Botrytis blight is the most serious disease affecting strawberries. The causal organism, Botrytis cinerea, can live both as a parasite and as saprophyte on decaying plant debris.

Botrytis blight usually starts as a blossom infection, which then later invades the fruit, causing them to rot. Rot may first appear at the base of the fruit or when the berry is in contact with the soil, other damp surfaces, or other rotten fruit. The rot can destroy the berry within 48 hours. As ripening increases and the humidity remains high, a characteristic gray, fuzzy coating or web produced by the fruiting fungus covers the strawberry fruit. As the disease progresses, spores are produced and are easily blown or splashed onto healthy foliage. Once the fungus gets established in a field it can produce spores continuously throughout the season.

Moisture is necessary for the spores to germinate and infect plants. Therefore the disease is favored by humidity and cool conditions. If you need to irrigate and you are using overhead irrigation, it is important to irrigate during the sunny part of the day and shut down the irrigation while there is still enough afternoon sunshine to dry off the plants and fruit before nightfall. This will limit the ability of the Botrytis spores to germinate and infect the fruit or blossoms.

Because most Botrytis infections

Editor:

In regards to your opinion column May 3, you raise some very good questions. You are right — questions like the ones you raise do demand answers. But are you suggesting that Pennsylvania Farm Bureau (PFB) has them all? Whats wrong with looking at the farmers who are successful, both conventional and otherwise?

You quoted State Rep. Art Hershey as saying those who think "grandfathers way of farming is the way to farm are in la-la-land" and you said "we agree." Does this mean Lancaster Farming is taking sides? Are you speaking for the entire staff? If you are, then I would suggest you are doing more harm to agriculture in this state then SB1413 could have.

My family has farmed in Pennsylvania for about 300 years. Some of us conventional and some of us not. My father was more conventional and in most years was lucky to break even. I am not and our farm makes a profit. If being a profitable farmer means living in "la-la-land," then here I'll stay. Grandfather's way of farming is not the way. Its a way of farming.

Those who opposed SB1413 never spoke out against farming in this state, only against the corporations who would sell these "bill of goods" to our rural com-

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

BY LAWRENCE W. ALTHOUSE

WHO DO YOU SAY HE IS?

Background Scripture:
Mark 8:28 through 9:8.
Devotional Reading:
Philippians 2:5-11.

Perhaps you have noted in reading Matthew, Mark, and Luke that Jesus is usually reticent to refer to himself with a title. If he refers to himself by any designation, it is most often as the "son of man." A term from the Old Testament, printed 97 times in the Book of Ezekiel, it is literally translated as "son of the man" and can mean either "the human one" or a very special human. Significantly, as Prof. Walter Wink notes, in 121 pages of the New Testament (NRSV), Jesus, and only Jesus, uses this term more than 80 times.

When he questions the disciples, "But who do you say that I am?" Peter answers, "You are the Christ" (the anointed one, Messiah). It is curious that Jesus does not confirm Peter's confession either explicitly or implicitly. Instead we are told, "And he charged them to tell no one about him" (Mark 8:30). When Jesus stands captive before Pilate, he is asked: "Are you the king of the Jews?" and his response is oblique: "You have said so" (Mark 15:2).

Why is Jesus so noncommittal about his title? I believe it was because he knew that each of the titles his followers gave him were subject to different interpretations and he did not want to be so narrowly defined. Some Jews clearly thought of the Messiah as one who would lead them to military victory over their foes. Obviously, Jesus didn't want people to think of him as that kind of messiah. Nor did he want people to equate him with an earthly king. If he was God's anointed one, he wanted to define that role as God alone intended him to fulfill it.

Teacher, Lord, Master

During his earthly ministry, his disciples called him variously "Teacher," "Lord," or "Master." For more than 2,000 years since the resurrection, however, Christians have wrangled over the precise meaning of these titles. We call him "King of Kings," "Lord of Lords," "Son of God, "Second Person of the Trinity," "Incarnate Word," among others. These titles can be meaningful to Christians, but they can also be so very divisive. When we argue and even fight over them, we miss the whole point.

Yes, Jesus wanted to know "Who do men say that I am?" and also "But who do you say that I am," but after charging them to tell no one about him, Mark tells us: "And he began to teach them that the son of man must suffer many things . . . and be killed . . ." (8:31). And then he goes on to define what it means to be his disciple.

It is not a matter of finding the right title to apply to Jesus, but, "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." The exalted titles we give him matter little if we do not respond to his call to follow him — even to bearing a cross.

The call of Christ is not to a foolproof theology, but to a life in which Jesus is present. "For what does it profit a man, to gain the whole world and forfeit his life?" (8:36) What good is it to call Jesus by all the right titles and subscribe to the best the theologies if we do not follow him as Lord and Master?

Ashamed Of Jesus

These next words from Jesus may seem not to be applicable to us, but don't jump to any conclusions: "For whoever is ashamed of me and of my words in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him will the son of man also be ashamed, when he comes in the glory of his Father with the holy angels" (8:38). That couldn't possibly refer to us, because we are never shamed of him. Or are we?

Whenever we decide that the way of Jesus Christ is not applicable to the way we relate to our families, our communities, or our world, is it not because we are ashamed of him? Whenever, instead of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, we let our political ideologies or personal prejudices determine how we do business, how we respond to the "have-nots," how we regard society's prisoners and our attitudes toward our enemies, is it not because we think of his teachings as not "practical" for the real world in which we live? Is that not being shamed of him?

The way we live our lives is the way we answer his question: "But who do you say that I am?"

ECONOMY SENDS MIXED SIGNALS

• U.S. GDP weak, unemployment worse.

• Consumer confidence up.

• Demand so far remains weak.

I've been out of the country for three weeks and it seems the markets have not changed much. I just returned from a volunteer assignment in Moldova. Last week's commodity reports from the Chicago Mercantile Exchange show more of the same weak commodity prices for butter and cheese. The futures markets indicate outlook for Class III prices is still weak. And the news about the overall economy is mixed.

The European news kept talking about a "Baghdad Bounce." The hope was that a successful end to the Iraq conflict would immediately lead to a stronger U.S. and European economy. It's still too early to tell if that is going to happen. The nation's unemployment rate rose to 6 percent in April, and the first quarter Gross National Product was half what market watchers hoped for.

Yet consumer confidence is up for the first time in months. The Conference Board reported that April's index for consumer confidence rose sharply from the month before, effectively ending a four-month period of declining confidence in the economy. That is very important to the U.S. dairy industry. More consumer spending could result in greater demand for dairy products.

There is some good market news. By now everyone knows the April federal order class prices. The Class III price rose $0.30 per CWT to $9.41 per CWT as cheese prices marginally strengthened. Also, commercial disappearance numbers for the period December 2002-February 2003 show some modest increases in "Other Cheese" (mainly mozzarella) and fluid milk sales.

It's still early in the season to be talking about a market change. The weather has not yet turned to summer heat, and the direction for the overall U.S. economy is still uncertain. Also, the milk production report has yet to confirm that dairy producers are responding to lower milk prices by reducing supplies. Another month will provide more market intelligence.

Oklahoma Feeder Cattle Weekly

Oklahoma City, OK
Report Supplied By USDA

OKLAHOMA NATIONAL STOCKYARDS, Weekly Cattle Summary — Compared to last week: Feeder steers and heifers 1.00-3.00 higher. Stocker cattle and calves firm to 4.00 higher. Demand very good for all classes. Last week's movement off wheat in Oklahoma was very active. Monday's run more of a mixed bag of calves, stockers, feeders with a few number 2 and 3 Texas crossbreds and this an indication that the May wheat run could be slowing. Buyers encouraged by last week's large slaughter and continued lighter carcass weights followed by a firm boxed beef trade. Several new crop calves included in calf supply.

Receipts this week 11,900; last week 15,733; last year 15,583. Supply consisted of 84% yearlings over 600 lbs; 11% calves and light yearlings; 5% cows and bulls. Heifers comprised 32% of feeder and calf supply.

Kill Weeds Without Compromising Corn Safety

There are many effective options for controlling broadleaf weeds in emerged corn So when it comes time to choose which postemergence herbicide to use, consider whether a herbicide's mode of action will impact or compromise corn stands

Often in late May and June, corn is stressed from rapid growth caused by warm temperatures and high humidity This makes young corn plants susceptible to stalk-snapping from high winds associated with spring thunderstorms

Growth-regulator herbicides that contain dicamba – such as Banvel, Clarity, Distinct and NorthStar – have been implicated as contributors to this problem, known as brittle snap

Recently, Dow AgroSciences conducted field trials to determine the effects of dicamba-based herbicides vs clopyralid-based herbicides – such as Hornet* WDG herbicide – on brittle snap Stand loss in the dicamba-based treatments ranged from 23 percent to 43 percent higher than the untreated control, while stand counts in the areas treated with Hornet were not statistically different than the untreated control

In addition to its safety to fast-growing corn, Hornet WDG provides excellent control of large-seeded broadleaf weeds like common and giant ragweed, velvetleaf, cocklebur and sunflower To improve control of troublesome weeds like waterhemp, lambsquarters or pigweed, add atrazine or Amm herbicide as tank-mix partners Hornet WDG can be applied to corn up to 20 inches tall or the V6 stage of growth – whichever comes first

To learn more about the crop safety features and weed control performance of Hornet WDG, contact your local ag retailer

Daily National Grain Market Summary

St. Joseph, MO
Report Supplied By USDA

Wheat, corn, and soybeans traded moderate to sharply higher, while soybeans were slightly lower. The reason for the higher wheat trade was the Egyptian purchase of red winter and white soft wheat. Light fund buying in the corn pits and wet weather in the corn-belt was noted supporting the market, along with a stronger wheat trade. Not much concern for planting delays as over half the corn crop is on the ground at this point. Very slow activity in the soybean pits with a lack of fresh news. Wheat was 5-9 cents higher, except for exports from the gulf which was 11-14 cents higher. Corn 3-5 cents higher. Sorghum was steady to 9 cents higher. Soybeans mostly 2-3 cents lower.

East Fluid Milk And Cream Review

Madison, Wis.
May 7, 2003
Report Supplied by USDA

Spot prices of class II cream, dollars per lb. butterfat: F.O.B. producing plants Northeast. 1 3110-1 4640. Delivered Equivalent: Atlanta: 1.3329-1.4640 mostly 1.3547-1.4203.

PRICES OF CONDENSED SKIM, dollars per lb. wet solids, F.O.B. producing plants: Northeast: Class II, includes monthly formula prices: .8500-.9800; Class III - spot prices - .7400-.8000.

SPOT SHIPMENTS OF GRADE A MILK: FLORIDA: This Week: In 0, Out 159; Last Week: In 0, Out 186; Last Year: In 0, Out 138. SOUTHEAST STATES: This week: In 0, Out 0; last week: In 0, Out 0; last year: In 0, Out 0.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Due to recent changes in milk supply agreements, milk import/export totals are not directly comparable to year ago figures and to shipments prior to April 1, 2003.

The following are the April 2003 Class and component prices under the Federal Milk Order pricing system: Class II $10.44 (down $0.10 from March), Class III $9.41 (up $0.30); and Class IV $9.73 (down $0.06). The following are the product price averages used in computing Class prices: butter $1.0736, NDM $0.8030, cheese $1.0997, and dry whey $0.1582. The Class II butterfat price is $1.1573 and the Class III/IV butterfat price is $1.1503.

Milk production is mostly steady in the southern parts of the East, but slowly increasing toward the peak in the north. Florida and the Gulf Coast states may have reached their peak and hot weather is starting to take its toll on the cows and the milk flow. New England and New York contacts are still reporting small increases, but they expect warmer weather and pasture/alfalfa growth will cause milk output to show additional gains. Storms in the Mid-South dumped heavy rain and caused power outages in many areas. Some farm pick-ups were delayed by flooding conditions and some plants were without power for several days. This caused many logistic problems for milk handlers and truckers. It is not yet know if any farm milk was lost and contacts reported that milk quality has not yet been affected. Bottled milk sales are reported as slow to fair, steady at best. Some colleges are winding up classes for the year and many southern schools will finish up later this month.

Surplus milk supplies are excessive and most operations are at or near capacity. However, there is processing capacity available in the East, should it be needed. Some processors reports that more milk is being offered at "below Class" prices, which is common at this time of year.

The condensed skim market is little changed, but offerings are increasing and demand is steady. More instances of lower prices for Class III wet solids have been noted, but most are within the range.

The fluid cream market is weak and prices are often lower. The CME average butter price did move almost a penny lower and multiples are still quite low. Supplies are excessive and many loads are still clearing to local and Midwest butter makers. More reports indicate that the ice cream trade has not yet taken off like most anticipated. It may be the weather or the economy, but cream suppliers say that orders from ice cream makers are not as heavy as they were a year ago. Bottled cream production is mostly steady, but as the strawberry season progresses, bottled cream sales usually pick up. Churning activity is steady at heavy levels.

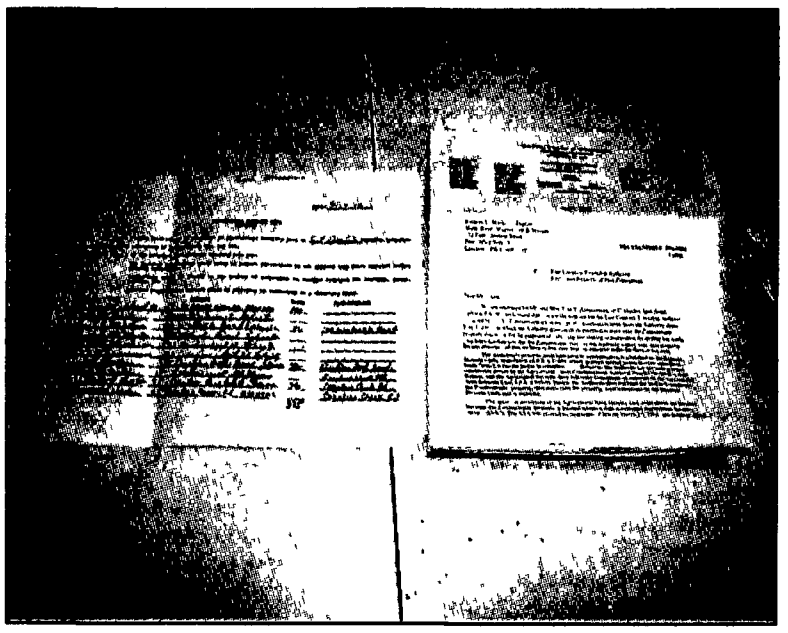
operation by the township, a 10-12 acre zone surrounding the wellhead would be restricted from normal agricultural practices, including fertilizer and herbicide applications, according to township officials.

John Bell, PFB's counsel for governmental affairs, said that an ag security application filed in September 2000 by the Zimmermans and seven other family farm owners in East Cocalico Township was automatically approved by law six months after the application was submitted and the township failed to take action on it.



Pictured at left is document with signatures from eight farm families applying for a total of 500 acres of ag security area in September of 2000. At right is a May 6 letter from Zimmerman's attorney to East Cocalico Township stating that the township's well-drilling plans are unlawful.

That leaves the township "no legal authority" to take over any land in the ag security area, according to Bell.

"The provisions of the ag area law are crystal clear," Bell said. "The municipality has 180 days to act on an Ag Security Area proposal."

Without action on the proposal, the Ag Security Area is "automatically approved" after the 180 days are up, Bell said.

Early this week, East Cocalico Township authorities drove stakes into an alfalfa field located near the center of the farm, according to Paul B. Zimmerman. The stakes mark the location where the well drilling is set to take place.

Zimmerman said he received a letter May 1 notifying him of the township's intention to drill the test well at the site. It was the latest of several similar letters Zimmerman said he received from the township in late winter and early spring.

According to Eugene Heft, chairman of the East Cocalico Township Water and Sewer Authority board, the Zimmerman site and two other locations in the township were selected by geologists for drilling. The geologists used sophisticated technology, including geographic information system (GIS) mapping and submarine beams to determine the best sites.

The Zimmerman farm is located on a limestone aquifer, a site recommended by geologists — even though the township has had marginal success drilling in limestone in the past, according to Heft.

"At this particular time, our success in the limestone aquifer hasn't been great," Heft said, noting that the most productive well in the township is in a sandstone aquifer and produces about 180 gallons per minute.

Heft said that the Zimmerman situation is the first he is aware of in which the township has claimed the right of eminent domain in taking property.

"We're allowed to do research drilling through eminent domain," Heft said. "If there's water there, we need to negotiate with the landowners (for purchase of the land.)"

According to Heft, the township's engineer has recommended drilling the additional wells to ensure a "safe yield" of water for the township in the event any existing wells fail.

Heft said the township also hopes the new well drillings will provide enough water for future development in the township. The township has experienced no water emergencies, even during last year's drought, he noted.

"We have enough water now for the people living here," Heft said. "But there's great pressure for commercial and residential development."

That pressure is exactly what prompted Earl Martin, along with the Zimmermans and other farm families in the township, to pursue ag security protection.

"I saw what's coming," said Martin, a farm owner who initiated the ag security application in 2000. "We're getting squeezed."

Zimmerman said he had always been cooperative with the township in prior situations, including allowing them to take part of his field to widen the roadway for a traffic light, and allowing them to install a new sewer line.

But plans for drilling a well in the middle of the farm is going too far, according to Zimmerman.

"It would just demolish the value of the farm," he said.

When the township first notified him of their intentions and drove stakes into his field in late winter, Zimmerman said he removed the stakes based on his belief that the township had no authority to enter his property without permission.

When township officials reinstalled the stakes earlier this week, they were accompanied by a police officer, Zimmerman noted.

He said he would have been more willing to work with the township if it had selected another site on the farm.

"I told them if they want to (drill) at the upper end of the meadow, I might go along with them," he said.

Zimmerman responded to speculation that his land would likely become more valuable with a municipal well on it.

"For development, naturally it would (have a higher dollar value), but those aren't our plans," he said, noting that Paul Jr. and his family want to continue dairying on the farm.

Paul Sr. first moved onto the farm at the age of 6. The property has been in the Zimmerman family since 1932, he said.

Zimmerman's attorney, Paula Leicht of Mette, Evans, and Woodside in Harrisburg, wrote a recent letter to East Cocalico Township expressing views similar to those of PFB attorney Bell.

"The Zimmermans object to the (Water and Sewer) Authority's entry onto their property for any purpose and we believe that such entry is unlawful under the facts of this case," Leicht wrote in the letter dated May 6.

Leicht wrote that the Agricultural Security Area that includes the Zimmerman farm was "created by operation of law on March 17, 2001."

According to Lena Zimmerman, many locals are opposed to the township's plans to drill a well on the farm.

"Neighbors are really upset about it," she said. "We really have support."

Governor Rendell Proclaims May Beef Month

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Agriculture Secretary Designee Dennis Wolff recently encouraged all Pennsylvanians to celebrate agriculture and the state's beef industry.

In Governor Rendell's May Beef Month Proclamation, he praised Pennsylvania's beef industry for responding to consumer trends and producing a safe and nutritious product while being good stewards of the land, promoting environmental practices that will allow them to pass improved farms and ranches to the next generation.

In addition, he noted that "May is the beginning of the summer cookout season — a perfect time for Pennsylvanians to grill hamburgers, steaks, and kabobs from their favorite grocery store."

Home to 28,000 beef producers and more than 1.6 million beef cattle, Pennsylvania's beef industry is an important part of the state's agriculture industry. The 9,546 farms located in the Commonwealth generate $1.7 billion for the economy. In the U.S., Pennsylvania ranks ninth in the numbers of cattle and calves sold.

Designed to strengthen consumer confidence in beef, the state's Beef Quality Assurance (BQA) Program focuses industry attention on strategies to promote beef quality and safety.

BQA has certified more than 900 producers in best management practices during the three-year project. "Beef from BQA certified cattle is value added, source verified, and available to the Commonwealth's consumers," said Paul Slayton, Executive Director, Pennsylvania Beef Council.

"Pennsylvania is proud of its beef industry and salutes our beef producers as they strive to produce the best possible beef product," comments Secretary Wolff.

"Pennsylvania's BQA Program is just another example of the Department of Agriculture's dedication to ensuring that consumers receive the best possible products."

BEYOND PRODUCTION

Every successful farmer also has to be a marketer. In one form or another, every business must either market its products and services directly or secure someone or some business to do the marketing.

Some farmers sell directly to consumers at farmers market or through Community Supported Agriculture (CSA), while others farm-out their marketing work to cooperatives, contractors, other companies, and other farmers.

Both type of customers demand products or services at the right time, at the right place, and at the right price. Further delineating their customer base, farmers can either choose to target their products to the mass markets, composed of many people with broadly similar needs, or to sell to niche markets composed of fewer customers with specific and similar needs.

The place to start is to ask yourself: "Who is my customer? What information should I gather about my customer?" Your answer should be "everything."

Noted marketing expert Jay Levinson said, "Marketing is everything you do to promote your business from the moment you conceive of it to the point at which customers buy your product or services and begin to patronize your business on a regular basis. The key words to remember are everything and regular basis."

The more you know about your customer's needs, wants and desires, the better off you will be in meetings those needs with a product that sells. How well you understand your customer and your market conditions will determine how effectively you are able to weather the obstacles and take advantage of the opportunities.

Gathering and analyzing information about your customers will provide you with several different types of typical customers. You will then be able to target your marketing efforts to the most appropriate customer group. Remember — 80 percent of your sales will come from 20 of your customers! It is always easier to get a repeat customer than it is to get a new customer.

Today, most successful businesses must have a strong customer orientation, designing their marketing strategies to meet the needs of their customers. This orientation goes beyond just buying and selling food. It includes selling an experience and/or benefits.

For example, at a Farmer's Market, customers attend because they want the experience, smell, and taste of farm-fresh food and they want to make personal contact with the farmer who grew that food. CSA farms take that experience a step further and essentially contract with their customers to provide a complete package of fresh produce, fruits, herbs, flowers, or other products over a specified period of time.

By focusing on growing good, healthy food at a reasonable price and by developing a sense of connectedness among their customers and their farms, many CSA farmers have been able to develop customer loyalty over many seasons. While the methods of building a customer base through friends, neighbors, family, and community groups are not new or unique, the ability to get the customer to pay up front, share some of the risk of production, and agree to purchase a specified quantity of food over a specified period of time is relatively new.

To learn more about establishing and growing a CSA, or to learn more about marketing your products, plan to come to Pennsylvania Farm Link's "Selling Produce Through a CSA" on June 25 from 6 p.m.-9 p.m. at Simple Gifts Farm near Columbia. Jonathan Weaver-Kreider will explain how he gained experience working on organic farms and market gardening, and has grown his CSA from 20 to 70 members on rented land.

corn borer, the refuge requirement — or land planted in non-Bt corn — has been standardized at 20 percent. That is still being worked out for the anti-rootworm corn, Antos said.

The Landisville research farm is one of the most important Pennsylvania sites for applied research on agronomic and some horticultural crops.

Research at the center involves the departments of agronomy, entomology, horticulture, and plant pathology plus the USDA and some county extension personnel. In addition to providing specific conditions for research, the facility increases opportunities for growers, consumers, and students to observe experiments and to consult with scientists.

The research involves cultivar testing of corn, soybean, small grain, forages, annual and perennial flowers, flowering crabapples, strawberries, tomatoes, pumpkin, and other horticultural crops. Other research involves pest control, cover crops, inoculants, fertility and various management studies.

Last fall, the farm grew in size from 106 acres to more than 150 acres with the acquisition of some neighboring farmland.

The research farm offers a Weed Day each July for farmers and consultants. This year's event will add a new feature by having commercial company representatives on hand, according to Johnson.

Yocum Recalls Changes

Yocum spoke about some of the changes that occurred in the four decades he worked at the research center.

"Probably the biggest change was that we went from zero ornamentals to a pretty big ornamental program," Yocum said of the addition of annual and perennial flowers to the list of plants grown for research purposes at the station.

Yocum said that agronomic crops — including corn, soybeans, and forages — were planted and harvested by hand during his early years on the research farm. Now, that's all done by machinery.

Another big change: tobacco, a major crop in earlier years, has disappeared from the research plots just as it has from many local farms.

Spring Field Walk

Johnson and Yocum joined a recent field walk for crop consultants and extension agents on the farm.

Del Voight, crop agent from Lebanon County, and other extension personnel, led about 15 participants on a May 1 tour of the research farm, including a stop at the center's solar-powered weather station, small grain plots, alfalfa stands, and a plot of timothy with heavy infestation of cereal rust mites.

Voight pointed out the rolled-up, wild garlic-like appearance of timothy leaves infested with the costly mites that are barely visible to the naked eye.

While he believes "in general, the population is lower" this spring compared to last year, Voight and other agents are reporting sizable infestations in some areas.

"I've seen leaves where they're lined up like soldiers in the grooves," Voight said.

According to Voight, the mites can drift in the air at altitudes of 10,000 feet, navigating by means of tails held upright to catch the wind. They only settle in fields of timothy and perhaps a narrow number of other grass varieties such as tall fescue.

As far as treating at the recommended threshold, when 25 percent of the leaves are curled, Voight advised "hedging on the early side."

The group heard preliminary reports on the possibility of weevil infestations in alfalfa this sea-

While Voight said he hadn't seen much weevil damage as of May 1, it was "too early to say there won't be a problem," he said.

Cutting the first alfalfa crop early, then checking the stubble for weevils, is a good option for controlling the insect, Voight said.

Erick DeWolf, plant pathologist, also pointed out some minor cases of spring blackstem, a fungal disease in alfalfa.

Jackson Named Associate Director Of Penn State Cooperative Extension

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. — Daney G. Jackson, associate professor and personnel leader for Ohio State University Extension, has been named associate director of Penn State Cooperative Extension, effective immediately.

"During his 17 years in extension, Daney has demonstrated outstanding leadership and a talent for building effective coalitions," says Theodore Alter, Penn State associate vice president for outreach and director of cooperative extension. "His success in shaping the human resource functions of a large state extension system, combined with his experience in regional extension administration and in conducting educational programs in the field, makes him uniquely qualified to help lead our organization during this time of economic uncertainty."

Jackson will provide leadership for the day-to-day operations of Penn State Cooperative Extension and will be a key member of the College of Agricultural Sciences administrative team. He will assist the director of cooperative extension in facilitating collaboration across the College of Agricultural Sciences and with other colleges and outreach units of the university.

Cooperative extension, with offices in each of Pennsylvania's 67 counties, transfers research-based information to individuals, families, businesses and communities through nonformal educational programs designed to meet locally identified needs.

Jackson began his extension career in 1985 with Mississippi State University, serving as a 4-H youth agent in Hancock County, Miss. From 1987 to 1991, he was an agriculture and natural resources extension agent in Lauderdale County, Miss.

After a year as a graduate associate at Ohio State University Extension's Ohio Center for Action on Coalition Development, Jackson returned to Mississippi Cooperative Extension, serving Lauderdale and Kemper counties as an area extension agent for forestry and horticulture from 1992 to 1994.

Jackson joined Ohio State University Extension as director of the 16-county South District in 1995. After being named statewide personnel leader in 2000, he directed the organization's human resources functions, including needs assessment, job analysis, job design, performance management, recruitment, hiring, compensation and benefits.

Jackson is a member of several professional organizations, including the national extension honorary society Epsilon Sigma Phi, the Society for Human Resource Management, the National Association of County Agricultural Agents and the National Association of Extension 4-H Agents, which recognized him with its 1993 Achievement in Service Award.

Jackson received dual bachelor's degrees (forestry, banking and finance) and a master's degree (extension education) from Mississippi State University in 1984 and 1990, respectively. He earned his doctorate in agricultural education from The Ohio State University in 1994.

Historic Preservation Trust Event Strolls To Drumore Farm

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — The Historic Preservation Trust of Lancaster County announced that it will conduct its 19th Annual Gourmet Gala at historic Drumore Farm, formerly the Steinman Country Estate, nestled in the rolling hills of southern Lancaster County on Sunday, May 18, from 4 p.m.-7 p.m.

The event is conducted each year at a historic venue of interest, and includes samplings of a variety of delicious cuisine, including gourmet appetizers, entrees, desserts, and beverages from a number of fine restaurants, caterers, wineries, and microbreweries in the area.

Drumore Farm, located at 331 Red Hill Road, Pequea, is just a 20-minute drive from downtown Lancaster, and will provide a setting for the event of refined elegance combined with gracious country living. The imposing, Georgian-inspired mansion of Drumore Farm was built in 1938 by prominent newspaper magnate John F. Steinman. The property, set on a knoll to enhance its impressive architectural style, will offer Gourmet Gala guests a unique treat, with an unparalleled blend of natural, unspoiled beauty with formal fountain gardens and unobstructed vistas across the beautiful Susquehanna River Valley. Drumore Farm has been characterized as one of the finest country estates in the Mid-Atlantic.

Admission to the gala is $50 per member or $60 per nonmember. Tickets may be obtained by phoning the trust office at (717) 291-5861. Major sponsor, Sterling Financial Trust, among other supporters, is leading the event this year.

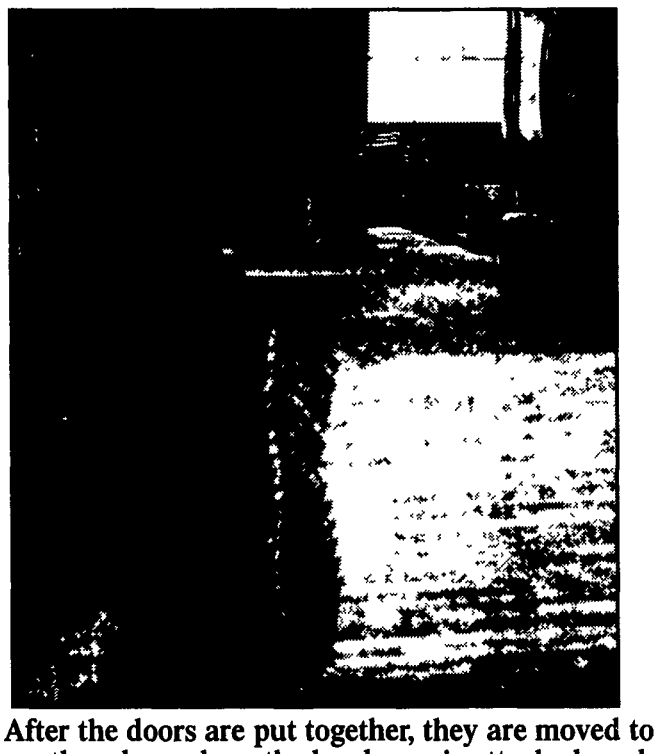
"A REMINDER OF DAYS GONE BY"

We are, once again, making silo doors in our own shop. For several years we had them contracted out, but this year we geared up to "do it again". This gives us a little better control over inventory and quality.

Primarily, our doors are for our own Sollenberger Silos; however, we make several styles of doors.

We make each of the doors out of Western Red Cedar, buying the grade closest to "A" which is clear of knots, and used in the furniture industry. Our doors are virtually free of knots, and the few you will see are small and tight. Door hardware for the Sollenberger doors is hot-dipped galvanized, and includes two ¾" steps.

Dave Sollenberger (above) is in charge of making the doors. With one helper, he can easily make 50 per day. By working part-time in the shop, along with his other responsibilities, he now has nearly 500 in inventory.



After the doors are put together, they are moved to another shop where the hardware is attached, and then ready to be loaded for another silo job. Some of the doors are sold to individuals who need replacements.

THESE FARMS SHARE COW COMFORT IDEAS PART 2

Beth Grove, Extension Agent — Dairy/Environment Lancaster County
Galen Kopp, Extension Agent — Dairy/Livestock Lebanon County

This is the second of a two-part article on cow comfort that we have titled "Focus on Dairy Forum."

Our forum participants will address two questions this week. First, let's have a brief review of the dairy businesses operated by our participants.

Meadow Vista Farm is owned by Don and Gerald Risser. They milk 260 cows near Bainbridge. The cows are housed in two freestall barns, both tunnel ventilated. The newer barn, built in 2000, also contains a bedded pack for transition cows and box stalls for freshening pens.

Elvin Reiff milks 60 cows in a tiestall barn just outside of Mount Joy. He has a purebred herd, and sells a few bulls and heifers for breeding purposes annually.

Vince and Julie Wagner milk 45 cows in a tiestall barn outside of Myerstown. Ju-Vindale Holsteins has had one of the lowest somatic cell counts in Lebanon County for the past 10 years, usually about 80,000 or better.

The Elvin Reiff Farm in Mount Joy.

Lee Simmons operates an 80-cow dairy near Mount Solon, Va. The herd is housed in a naturally ventilated 50 by 200 foot bedded pack barn. He combines this barn with a "Dairy Rotational Loafing Lot System" which consists of three paddocks that can be rotated for cow exercise and cleanliness.

What have you tried that did not work well for you?

Gerald Risser: The stalls in our older barn are 45 inches wide, and those in the new barn are 48 inches in width. That doesn't sound like a lot of variation, but we see a difference in how well the cows use the stalls. Our older, larger cows are not as comfortable in the stalls of the older barn, and will not use them as well. We tried using rubber belting in our feeding areas, but it has been too slick. If I were to redo it, I would use a material designed for cow traffic, such as we did in the holding pen.

Reiff: A few years ago we made some changes for the better in the barn, particularly as related to stall size. We moved the neck rail forward and moved the water bowls from the cow bed divider to the feed alley side of the stalls. The cows can access the water much more easily, and seem to be more comfortable.

Wagner: We used to have the PVC pipe bedding saver attached to the stalls with chains rather than fastened in place. This did not work well, as we had cows that had legs and dewclaws caught and sustained hock injuries as a result. We now have a 2-inch PVC pipe fastened to the curb as a bedding retainer, which works well.

Simmons: When we were still using the older clay-base freestalls, we tried to modify them by making them wider and, in some cases, longer. The cows still refused to use the stalls as we had hoped. Although the pack barn has worked well, if I built another barn I would look at the possibility of taller sidewalls for more natural ventilation.

If you were talking to a young dairy producer just going into the business, what advice would you give related to keeping the cow herd comfortable?

Risser: I would say to not shortchange yourself on square footage — design your barn or stalls for maximum cow numbers you anticipate. We have seen here that when the herd is overcrowded, the cows are more stressed and have more health problems. If you are designing a new facility, make it easy to work with the cows! When we built to barn in 2000, we designed the bedded pack and freshening pens so that one person can handle and move fresh cows. It has really made things so much easier for everyone working on the farm.

Vince Wagner at Ju-Vindale Holsteins.

Reiff: I guess my first piece of advice would be to use generous amounts of bedding in the cow stalls. We have tried cutting down on the amount of bedding on our mattresses, but the cows did not stay as clean and dry, causing more problems in the long run. If I were to do my barn over, I would probably install one water bowl per cow. I have noticed that some cows tend to take over the water bowl from their stallmate, and I think having plenty of water for each cow might help production.

Wagner: It seems like many people are building and designing new barns around a manure storage system, but sometimes they forget cow comfort. A system which doesn't allow for adequate bedding may hurt you in the long run, because the cows won't be as healthy. Use plenty of bedding in cow stalls, even with mattresses! It cuts down on injuries and keeps cows much cleaner.

We would like to thank each of these farmers for taking time to show us their operations and answer our questions. If you have ideas for future "Focus on Dairy Forums," please share them with your local Penn State dairy agent.

BIOTERRORISM AND AGRICULTURE

Jamie Rowley
Wenger Feeds, Inc.
Representative of The Lancaster Chamber's Agriculture Committee

"What would happen if someone deliberately infected a plant with a pathogen?"

Larry Madden, a professor of plant epidemiology at Ohio State University, presented that question to a Phytopathological Society conference in 1999.

Yet even prior to 1999, scientists and government officials began seriously considering the possibility of an individual or terrorist state intentionally using or threatening the use of viruses, bacteria, fungi, or toxins from living organisms to produce death or disease in humans, animals, and plants.

The threat of bioterrorism in agriculture is essentially twofold: preharvest crop injury that creates an economic hardship for both livestock and crop producers and postharvest infection that threatens public health. Both scenarios would be a disaster psychologically, physically, and economically with marked losses for integrated agricultural businesses and U.S. trade in farm products.

A risk factor for bioterrorism is the relative abundance of possible bioterror agents. Foreign animal diseases such as foot and mouth disease, classical swine fever, and Exotic Newcastle Disease and foreign pests such as citrus canker, soybean rust, karnal bunt, and black stem rust present the biggest threats because they are relatively unknown in the U.S. and may be difficult for field agents and diagnostic labs to quickly identify.

The first step in thwarting the spread of a bioterror attack is education. Enhancing basic understanding of the biology of pests and pathogens will allow field agents, labs, and other first responders to develop new tools for surveillance and new ways to control an outbreak. Vaccines and the creation of pest-and disease-resistant varieties of crops will also provide some protection against bioterrorism or the threat of bioterrorism.

Secondly, vigilance is paramount. Farmers and ranchers should remain diligent and take notice of visitors to their farm. Simple steps such as limiting farm entry to one gated road, securing the farm perimeter with fencing, minimizing entrance into restricted areas, placing buzzers on entrance gates, having occupied homes or offices at roads leading to the farm, and ensuring that areas within and surrounding the farm buildings are well lit can help reduce the risk of unauthorized entry.

Finally, rapid response will be the key to preventing a large-scale outbreak. As with any outbreak of disease, rapidly containing the threat is the key to preventing widespread economic damage. In the case of livestock disease, animals will need to be quarantined and may need to be slaughtered. Crops that are diseased may need to be destroyed. By remaining vigilant, identifying the disease or pest, and rapidly responding to the threat, bioterror threats can be contained.

munities as the only answer to agriculture. You ran an article in the same issue of the paper regarding alternative housing for sows, so clearly more and more people are concerned with these type of operations as a long-term answer to agriculture's problems.

Creating a rift between farmers who are a subculture of a much larger society doesnt do anybody any good. Not for conventional or alternative farmers. We must find a common ground on which we can have a positive discussion on the future of agriculture in Pennsylvania.

You said that Mr. Hershey spoke at a Farm Bureau banquet at the West Shore Country Club (which if it is, like any other country club, was probably a farm at one time) and made his comments to about 150 people. Well, more than 1,000 people attended the PASA (Pennsylvania Association for Sustainable Agriculture) Conference this year and I wouldnt say they were in "la-la-land." But I would say it is the most positive agricultural event I attend every year. People looking for answers to the very questions you raise. You should know, Lancaster Farming was there!

Some form of large commodity agriculture will always be with us. Its a big world with a lot of corporate money involved. But we must have a local farming base that serves Pennsylvania citizens. There is a need, there is a demand, and there are people willing to create an infrastructure for it. Lets work together for all farmers. Lets concentrate on what we have in common. Together we will build an agriculture system that has always been the hallmark of Pennsylvania.

Dairy Producers, Agribusinesses Invited To Attend CWT Meetings

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Several of the Northeast's major dairy cooperatives have joined together to host informational meetings on the (Cooperatives Working Together) (CWT) program.

The meetings are open to all dairy producers and agribusiness professionals who are interested in learning more about the details of this national program.

CWT was developed through the National Milk Producers Federation (NMPF) with input from dairy producers from across the country. Dairylea Cooperative, Dairy Farmers of America (DFA), Agri-Mark, St. Albans Cooperative, Allied Federated Cooperatives, Inc., Conesus Milk Producers Cooperative Association, Mount Joy Farmers Cooperative Association, Oneida-Madison Milk Producers Co-op, Cortland Bulk Milk Producers Co-op, and other cooperatives have worked collectively to set up meetings across the Northeast.

The CWT Program is a multi-dimensional, farmer-led and farmer-funded program created to improve milk prices by addressing supply and demand imbalances. There is an oversupply of milk of between four and five billion pounds. The CWT program will work to achieve its goal by providing incentives for increased butter and cheese exports and to encourage farmers to voluntarily reduce milk production.

Regional supply issues have been taken into consideration in development of the CWT program. The program will guard against a disproportionate loss of production capacity on a regional basis.

The 32 cooperative members of NMPF are expected to formally approve and commit to investing in the program when they meet on May 9. The members of NMPF collectively market 70 percent of all milk produced in the U.S. Program details are expected to be released following this meeting.

The informational meetings in the Northeast will begin May 14 and continue through the end of the month. Additional meetings could be added in June and the cooperatives would publicize those meeting dates and locations when scheduled. All dairy producers, including members of the cooperatives hosting the meetings, members of other cooperatives, and independent producers are encouraged to attend along with members of the agribusiness community.

For additional information on the CWT program, visit www.nmpf.org or www.dairymarketingservices.com/CWT. The cooperatives have also established a Northeast CWT Hotline at (888) 858-7813. Dairy producers and agribusinesses can call this number for the current week's meeting times and locations as well as basic program information.

Penn State Instructor Receives Award

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — Dale Olver, instructor in dairy and animal science, has received the 2003 Excellence in Academic Advising Award from Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences Alumni Society. The award recognizes faculty for outstanding service to students in academic advising, career planning and personal counseling.

Olver, co-advisor of the Dairy Science Club, is coach of the Dairy Cattle Judging Team. He advises approximately 25 undergraduate students per year, and he works with eight to 20 undergraduates each year in independent studies/teaching assistant activities.

He teaches courses in animal science, dairy judging, dairy cattle production and management, dairy cattle evaluation and selection, and dairy science that are taken by hundreds of students each year.

Olver also works with youth involved in 4-H dairy programs. He provides leadership to the state 4-H dairy program and coordinates several 4-H dairy events, such as the Pennsylvania Junior Dairy Show.

In addition to receiving high praise from a host of students he currently advises, Olver — who will receive an engraved brass plate and $1,000 honorarium at Penn State's commencement ceremonies — got support from a number of colleagues and past students.

"Whether it is taking extra time to make sure that each student understands his or her role in an extracurricular activity, or pursuing outside parties to enrich the learning experience of the student, Dale ignores the clock when it comes to developing student leaders," said Kirk Sattazahn, central marketing manager for Select Sire Power of Rocky Mount, Va., and a former Dairy Science Club member.

Southeast Regional Twilight Fruit Growers Meeting Planned

POTTSVILLE (Schuylkill Co.) — Fruit growers and individuals interested in growing fruit are invited to the twilight meeting sponsored by Penn State Cooperative Extension, Tuesday, May 13 at 6:30 p.m. at Jersey Acres Farms, Inc., 1615 Panther Valley Road, Pine Grove. This meeting will qualify for update credits toward pesticide recertification.

Dr. Greg Krawczyk, Penn State Extension Entomologist from the Biglerville Fruit and Extension Research Center, will give an update on insects found in orchards.

Tom Callahan, Director of Sales, Adams County Nursery, Inc., will discuss apple tree rootstocks. Also, a sprayer calibration demonstration will be conducted.

For additional information contact George Perry at (570) 622-4225, Penn State extension horticulture agent.

Woodland Tour Set

BEDFORD (Bedford Co.) — Woodland Owners of the Southern Alleghenies, the organization well known for the annual forestry conference it sponsors in late winter, has planned three woodlot-related programs free of charge to the public.

Thursday, May 22, a tree thinning tour has been planned with Dave Scamardella of the Bureau of Forestry as he marks the trees to be cut for a thinning and explains why he chose those trees. The tour will take place on the property of John and Judy Herr outside Everett. It will begin at 11 a.m. and be limited to 20 persons.

Participants are asked to bring a covered dish for lunch. Refreshments will be provided. Contact John Herr at (814) 735-3855 or ourhouse@pennswoods.net.

The two other programs planned will focus on identifying trees, with and without leaves. The first tour is scheduled for August 20 near Mann's Choice. The other will take place in the fall.

STOP Group Gains Ground

led by Sen. Sean Logan (D-45), introduced a bill based on the STOP proposal to eliminate property tax for homeowners.

The legislation calls for a 1.55 percent increase in the state's income tax, a 1 percent increase in sales and use tax, and a 2 percent increase in real estate transfer tax to help make up for the $6.2 billion collected annually in home property taxes in Pennsylvania. Savings gained by cutting the current property tax system's administrative costs would also contribute.

"STOP brought a reasonable, realistic plan for eliminating the property tax in Pennsylvania," Logan said.

The plan is aimed at "eliminating, not reducing," the property tax, he noted, differentiating between the STOP proposal and Gov. Ed Rendell's plan to reduce the tax.

The state income tax would increase from 2.8 percent to 4.35 percent and sales tax for most areas of the state would rise to 7 percent under the new proposal.

STOP members live mainly in the western part of the state. They say property taxes are forcing some Pennsylvanians off their properties, especially elderly residents on fixed incomes.

Many STOP members come from the Pittsburgh area (Allegheny County), where recent property tax reassessments prompted homeowners to take action and form the grassroots coalition.

Bob Logue, a Pittsburgh-area radio personality, heads the STOP group.

"The property tax is harmful to Pennsylvania," Logue said at the press conference Tuesday at the Capitol where the legislation was introduced.

Logue and about 10 STOP members joined Sen. Logan and other members of Congress at the unveiling of the legislation, known as Senate Bill 717.

Pointing out that groceries, clothing, and medicines are not taxed in the state, Logue wondered why Pennsylvania continues to tax another basic need — shelter.

According to Sen. Logan, whose district covers parts of Allegheny and Westmoreland counties, potential benefits of SB 717 include savings of $61.3 million of property tax rebates from the Property Tax/Rent Rebate Program.

Those savings would allow 71,000 more seniors to qualify for PACE, the state's prescription drug program, Logan said.

Commercial and industrial properties would continue to be taxed under the new bill — an annual revenue of $3.1 billion.

Bob Logue is joined by other STOP members at the introduction of a new Senate Bill to eliminate the Pennsylvania property tax.

For farm owners, that means the commercial part of their operation would still be subject to property tax, but the homestead itself would no longer be taxed.

Senators co-sponsoring the bill include Jack Wagner (D-Allegheny), Jane Clare Orie (R-Allegheny, Butler, Westmoreland), Gerald LaValle (D-Beaver, Lawrence), Jay Costa, Jr. (D-Allegheny), Richard Kasunic (D-Fayette, Somerset, Washington, and Westmoreland), John Wozniak (D-Cambria, Clearfield, Somerset, and Westmoreland), Anthony Williams (D-Delaware, Philadelphia), and Don White (R-Armstrong, Indiana, Jefferson, Westmoreland).

Rep. Marc Gergely (D-Allegheny) was also on hand at the press conference to announce his plan to introduce similar legislation in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives.

Wolff Confirmed As Ag Secretary

and the department staff, the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture (PDA) will continue to further the interests of Pennsylvania agriculture.

In cooperation with Governor Rendell's Plan for a New Pennsylvania, Wolff intends to invest in educational initiatives and economic development programs.

"Under my watch, I will work to enhance the profitability of the farm — whether the farm is small, medium, or large — and to ensure that agricultural entities have access to the economic development programs of the commonwealth, just as other businesses have," Wolff said. "Agriculture is a business without walls, but it is every bit a business."

Lancaster Farming spoke with Wolff about the confirmation Wednesday afternoon. According to Wolff, Gov. Rendell's proposals, scheduled to be in place by the end of the fiscal year (end of June), call for a property tax break for farmers of about 30 percent, Wolff noted. Wolff also pointed to the business loan programs available to farmers.

Regarding the initiatives in place for dairy Cooperatives Working Together (CWT), Wolff noted that PDA remains "supportive of that concept, and we will help however we can," he said. Wolff noted the dairy industry in the self-help program remains "in their own hands."

With tough economic times, we must continue to "live within our means, operate more efficiently, and get the most out of every dollar we spend," he said. In light of the budget crunch felt at the state university level, PDA understands the implications but continues to "appreciate the Extension Service and how critical it is to the farmers of Pennsylvania."

Wolff told Lancaster Farming that a new Farm Show executive director may be appointed within the next week as they continue to review candidates from a variety of backgrounds, he noted.

Wolff also said that he will work with the education community to enhance the awareness of the next generation about current farm practices and the viability of agriculture to all communities.

"In addition, I want to build strong partnerships with government to ensure that Pennsylvania agriculture can continue to grow and meet the demands of the consumers," Wolff said.

Wolff is involved in agriculture on and off the farm. As owner of Pen-Col Farms in Columbia County, a 600-acre, 500-head Holstein dairy cattle operation, Wolff has specialized in purebred Holstein genetics. To aid in the development of the international market for dairy genetics, Wolff has entered into joint ventures in Wisconsin and the United Kingdom.

Wolff has used his expertise in many forms. He has served as a member of the state USDA/Farm Service Agency, the World Trade Organization, and the Pennsylvania Animal Health and Diagnostic Commission. He also was on cooperative boards of directors and the Pennsylvania Dairy Stakeholders. Wolff also serves on the Penn State University Board of Trustees and is involved in many community organizations.

Wolff is known around the world for his agriculture work. In 1994, he was recognized as Master Farmer. He acted as a representative in conferences in New Zealand, Australia, Chile, Argentina, and Canada, and received the Leadership Central Penn Award.

Pennsylvania's 59,000 farm families continue to keep agriculture a leading economic enterprise in the commonwealth. With more than $4 billion in cash receipts, Keystone farmers and agribusinesses are also the leading agricultural producers in the northeastern U.S. (30)

Rendell Administration Announces First Loans

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — On behalf of Gov. Edward G. Rendell, Community and Economic Development (DCED) Secretary Dennis Yablonsky and Acting Agriculture Secretary Dennis Wolff announced two loans each for $175,000 to the Monsour Sheep Farm in Bedford County and the Lady Moon Farms, Inc., in Franklin County through the Small Business First Fund (SBF). These funds mark the first loans awarded to a production agriculture business through the SBF program.

The SBF program, an economic development tool utilized by local area loan organizations across the state, provides low-interest loans of up to $200,000 for businesses with 100 employees or fewer.

"The Rendell Administration is committed to partnering with organizations and businesses to strengthen our communities and our economy," Yablonsky said. "The Monsour Sheep Farm and Lady Moon Farms are great examples of that commitment to Pennsylvania agriculture. This year, the Small Business First program will provide a total of up to $30 million in low-interest loans. Our investment in projects like this demonstrates our dedication to the expansion and retention of small businesses across the commonwealth."

"The Department of Agriculture is pleased that the Monsour Sheep Farm and Lady Moon Farms have been selected for a Small Business First loan," Wolff said. "Hopefully, more agricultural operations will benefit from this excellent program. These loans mark an historic turning point in the commonwealth, recognizing agriculture as a business and providing farmers the opportunity to participate in the economic development program of Pennsylvania."

Monsour Sheep Farm, a 400-acre sheep farm founded in 1978 in Bedford County, hosts a closed flock of more than 1,000 ewes and lambs. The farm employs 10 workers and has a production philosophy that encourages use and reuse of natural resources. Its seasonal management cycle includes lambing in the spring, shearing in the summer, pasture rotation, and winter-feeding. The SBF funds will be used to purchase 115 acres of land and to expand the flock of cheviot ewes to 200 animals.

"Southern Alleghenies Planning and Development Commission is pleased to be able to offer such a unique financing solution to the area's production farms through the expanded Small Business First program," Scott D. Mazey, director, business lending services, Southern Alleghenies Planning Commission. "Agricultural enterprises like Monsour Sheep Farm play an important role in the overall health and growth of the region's economic base."

Lady Moon Farms, Inc., the largest certified organic vegetable farm on the East Coast, was started in Snyder County in 1987. The operation moved to Franklin County in 1997 and was incorporated in January 2001. They operate on 340 acres at three different parcels within Franklin County.

Franklin County Area Development Corporation (FCADC) requested the SBF funds to assist with the purchase and installation of an irrigation system. This loan will allow the retention of 30 existing employees and the creation of six new full-time jobs.

"The FCADC is pleased to be working with Lady Moon Farms, given that support for the retention and expansion of agricultural endeavors is integral to our comprehensive economic development strategy," said Mike Ross, president, FCADC.

The SBF program is designed to stimulate the expansion and assist in the retention of small businesses for the purpose of creating new jobs and retaining existing jobs in Pennsylvania. SBF provides low-interest loans for small businesses for land and building purchases and construction, machinery and equipment, and working capital.

Businesses interested in applying for funds through the Small Business First program must submit their loan application to the Area Loan Organization (ALO) that services the area where the borrower's business is located. An ALO is a non-profit corporation that the commonwealth has empowered to make loans. The ALO is responsible for approving and recommending projects to the commonwealth.

For more information about the Small Business Loan Program, visit DCED's Website at www.inventpa.com.

Va. Dairy Festival Is Chance To Visit Modern Dairy Farm

STAUNTON, Va. — The Shenandoah Valley Dairy Farm Festival and Educational Tour at Staunton, Friday and Saturday, May 16-17, from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., is a chance to enjoy a family-oriented outing that is both fun and educational. The festival will be conducted at Christians Creek and Holsteins, Inc., Stuarts Draft and is hosted by Lloyd Lee and Disa McPherson and Vernon and Lucy Wright.

The festival is a free educational program geared towards people from non-agricultural backgrounds. It is sponsored by Virginia Cooperative Extension.

The festival aims to teach visitors of all ages about the daily activities and technologies of a modern dairy farm. Visitors will have the chance to learn about dairy housing and cow comfort; dairy nutrition and rations; equipment and farm safety; animal waste, Best Management Practices and the environment; and milk nutrition and dairy products.

In addition to educational activities about milk, ice cream, and cheese, there will be fun for the whole family with face painting, a calf palace, milk mustaches, a petting area, and balloons.

MMB Announces April Class I Price

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — The Milk Marketing Board (MMB) announced the prices to be paid to Pennsylvania dairy farmers for April Class I milk (beverage) as an average of $13.59 in the western areas of the commonwealth, and an average of $14.08 in the central and eastern areas of the commonwealth.

These prices do include the overorder premium of $1.55 per one hundred pounds of milk.

Farmers, whose milk production is pooled under a federal order, will receive a marketwide blend price based upon the value of all classes of milk. However, the blend price received will vary as the component composition of a farmer's milk differs from the established benchmarks of 3.5 percent butterfat, 2.99 percent protein, and 5.69 percent other solids.

Since 1988 the MMB has mandated overorder premiums on Class I milk because of adverse conditions affecting Pennsylvania dairy farmers. Chairwoman Beverly R. Minor announced that since the inception of the MMB's overorder premium, Pennsylvania dairy farmers have received $290,912,000 in additional income.

death of the industry has been:

According to PASS, Lancaster County in 2001 had the majority of "other tobacco" production, including 2,500 acres harvested for a yield of 1,996 pounds (a total of 4.99 million pounds in production) for a value of $7.7 million. If you add the remaining 500 acres in the state for tobacco harvest, the total value in 2001 was a little more than $8 million.

In the past 23 years, one year stands out for tobacco production in Lancaster County, according to PASS — 1981. That year there were 12,240 harvested acres at 25.1 million pounds of tobacco cigar filler Pennsylvania Seedleaf Type 41. Since then, in 1985, there were 7,050 harvested acres at 13.7 million pounds. In 1988, the first year of both Type 41 and tobacco air-cured light southern Maryland Type 32 production, there were 5,340 harvested acres at 9.22 million pounds of Type 41 and 3,390 acres of Maryland Type 32 at 6.2 million pounds.

By 1998, the numbers decreased even more, to 3,900 harvested Type 41 acres at 8.1 million pounds and 2,500 Maryland Type 32 acres at 4.75 million pounds.

In 2001, the latest year for which data are available, Type 41 registered 1,700 acres at 3.5 million pounds and only 800 acres of Maryland Type 32 at 1.48 million pounds.

For all classes of tobacco, the 23 years show stark differences. In 1981 for all of Pennsylvania, the best year in the past 23, there were 13,300 harvested acres for 27.26 million pounds. By 2002, harvested acres for all tobacco dropped way down, to 3,400 harvested acres for 6.8 million pounds.

To those whose income (as well as mortgage) depended on tobacco, we wish you well. If you take out loans and depend on tobacco, you could be wishing upon a star, or so the saying goes.

We are even reminded of the quote from Shakespeare about how money can build and destroy:

Neither a borrower nor a lender be;
For loan oft loses both itself and friend,
And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.
This above all: to thine ownself be true,
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.
— Polonius in "Hamlet."

In the coming months, Lancaster Farming will be examining niche markets and ways in which producers are taking advantage of them in several of our special sections. We hope to pass along their success stories so that others can benefit in these tough times.

begin in the blossom, it is essential to apply fungicides during the bloom period. Research has shown that if the blossom sprays are applied in a timely manner, spraying during harvest does little to improve control and may not be needed. However if the blossom sprays are missed, sprays at harvest time alone will not be very effective because the infections started during the blossom period.

Apply the first spray at 10 percent bloom — apply again at full bloom and late bloom. There are a number of products labeled for Botrytis control in strawberries, including Elevate, Captan, Thiram, Benlate, and Topsin M. Read and follow the label directions, especially the "days to harvest" restrictions. Consult the "Commercial Berry Production and Pest Management Guide" available from your local extension office for more details.

Pedal To Preserve Bike Tour Back By Popular Demand

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — Lancaster Farmland Trust's bicycle tour, Pedal to Preserve, has returned after a one-year hiatus.

Pedal to Preserve, the Trust's sixth bicycle tour fundraiser, will be conducted on Saturday, June 21. The tour, which begins and ends at Donegal High School on Marietta Avenue in Mount Joy, accommodates leisure and competitive cyclists, offering three tours that wind through the beautiful farmland of western Lancaster County — farmland which contains the highest density of preserved farmland in the country.

Honorary event chair Janelle Stelson of WGAL 8 TV and honorary co-chair Officer Dan Jenkins of the Lancaster City Bureau of Police-Bicycle Unit will be "pedaling to preserve" Lancaster County's precious farmland at this year's ride.

Honorary event chair Janelle Stelson of WGAL 8 TV and honorary co-chair Officer Dan Jenkins of the Lancaster City Bureau of Police-Bicycle Unit will both be "pedaling to preserve" Lancaster County's precious farmland at this year's ride.

"I was born in Alaska and raised in Seattle . . . some of the most beautiful country in the world," said Stelson. "My family all lives in the Seattle area — so why do I choose to make my home here? The quality of life in Lancaster County and its unique landscape.

"A newsroom can be kind of a wild place to work . . . and when I need peace, I head to the country, often by myself, to ride or walk and clear my head," she said. "There are too few places like this left in the world. Anything I can do to help preserve such a treasure is my absolute pleasure."

"I do believe that preservation of farmland is vital to the historical character of Lancaster County, and is a great cause," said Officer Dan Jenkins, who will be participating in the 52-mile ride. "I am looking forward to the ride."

The routes include a six-mile "family ride" starting at 9:30 a.m., a 20-mile ride starting at 9 a.m., and a 52-mile ride starting at 8 a.m. Riders are asked to register at least 30 minutes before their start time.

"The routes are designed to appeal to a wide variety of cyclists, from people who want to come with their children for the family ride, to those who prefer a longer and more challenging ride," said Trust board member and route designer Bill Hoffman.

The scenic, lightly traveled routes showcase more than 20 farms that have been preserved forever from development. Water stops, snacks, and support vehicles will be provided along the route.

Registration is $20 in advance or $30 on ride day. Advance registrants receive event T-shirts featuring the "Ride Because She Can't" cow wearing a bike helmet. Children 12 and under ride free when accompanied by an adult.

Riders are also encouraged to obtain pledge sponsorships and qualify for prizes. Proceeds fund farmland preservation efforts throughout Lancaster County.

Pedal to Preserve brochures, including registration forms, are available by calling the Trust at (717) 293-0707 or at www.savelancasterfarms.org.

The event will be conducted rain or shine. All riders must wear a bicycle helmet.

Video/Internet 73,300; last week 8,100; last year 10,600. Auctions 258,600; last week 222,100; last year 205,900. This weeks reporting auction volume included 47 percent over 600 lbs and 47 percent heifers.

Compared to last week, feeder steers and heifers under 800 lbs sold fully steady but a large influx of heavy feeders coming off graze-out wheat weighed on the market and traded weak to 1.00 lower. Stocker calves and lightweight yearlings sold steady to 1.00 higher across most of the Plains and western states, but Southeastern markets were not nearly as active and their cross-bred calves traded as much as 3.00 lower. Western orders have tapered off as most summer pastures have already been stocked, however widespread rains across many western grazing areas (like Kansas, Nebraska, and the mountain states) have allowed backgrounders to add a few grazers at the local level. Much of Texas and Oklahoma remains dry, causing wheat pastures to mature and lose their grazing value. However, dropping a couple weeks off of the end of the graze-out season will not spoil the reputation of this years wheat pasture. Gains were astronomical and many cattle were forced off early as they grew beyond a marketable weight. Despite the droves of yearlings weighing over 800 lbs, this springs heavy feeder market has been relatively strong.

Cattle feeders continue to buy replacements for about the same price per pound as their closeouts, after installing extra pounds at a savings of around 30 cents per unit. But, how long will the fat market be able to hold this level? Packers keep reminding feedlots that this is the time of year when the slaughter market is supposed to head for the 60s and the futures are depicting an upcoming downturn. Perhaps these newly introduced May contracts have these stubborn cowboys confused, but they seem to be enjoying the current fat market and the extra hundred dollars per head. In fact (after analyzing the empty pens, green showlists, a 17.00 Choice-Select spread, and the first 700,000 head slaughter in over 6 months) the cattle feeders may decide its time to take the market back to the 80s.

Small Creameries: The Wave Of The Future?

KEESEVILLE, N.Y. — Some folks decry the decline of small "family farms." Some folks also try to do something about it. Sam and Denise Hendren are trying to do something about it.

Sam grew up on a small family dairy farm in Ohio. The family farm, owned and operated by Sam's cousins, milks about 1,100 cows and has 4,000 acres of crops. Sam has always wanted to farm and could have stayed and worked on that farm, but that's not the type of farming he wanted.

Like many farm kids, he was told that farming did not offer him a good future, and that he should go away, get an education, and go into business. He did that, but found himself driving around on lunch hour looking at cornfields.

Finally, Sam and Denise sold their business. Sam got the farm he wanted and Denise got the store she wanted, MoonTree Designs in Lake Placid. Sam says they have less money but a lot more fun.

He wanted a farm style that provides a pleasant lifestyle for a couple or family, that supports the local economy and re-energizes rural communities, and that could be attained by people without huge financial resources and the business acumen to manage those large investments well. The Farmstead Creamery at Clover Mead Farm, northeast of Keeseville, N.Y., is his attempt to develop and model such a farm. This is a rebirth of sorts for the farm. Milk was bottled and sold here when it was known as the Signor Farm during the first half of the last century.

Sam likes the idea of a small farmstead creamery because it doesn't take a huge financial investment and is flexible. Sam knew there would be a learning curve, but the investment in the cows and cheese-making equipment was such that they could survive for a year without selling any product if need be. His start-up investment was less than $5,000 for the milking system, $9,000 for certified organic cows, and $35,000 for the cheese room expansion and equipment. He bought good quality used equipment for the cheese plant and could have gotten started for less money.

The farmstead creamery concept is very flexible. Sam is milking cows and making cheese.

Instead, he could buy milk and not milk cows. He could raise heifers and beef animals instead of milking. If milk prices got high enough, he could add more cows and sell milk rather than make cheese. He could make other types of cheese, make yogurt, cottage cheese, or butter, or sell milk and cream. Vegetables can supplement the cheese sales. He could switch to goats or sheep for those special cheeses. The investment in the small milking setup and cheese equipment does not lock him into one particular production mode.

Sam started milking his small herd of Jersey cows (now six cows) and making cheddar cheese in June. His farm and the cheese produced there are "certified organic." The cows have lots of pasture, and are milked from April through December to take advantage of the pasture season and the nutritional values associated with milk from cows on fresh pasture.

Sam participates in the NYS-CHAP program to protect his herd's health and provide high quality milk as the foundation for his cheese. He focuses on "passive sanitation" to keep his facility exceptionally clean and prevent problems and to minimize the need for harsh sanitizers. For instance, he has boots that are used only in the cheese room, and other boots for the milking parlor, and other boots that are used in the barnyard and fields. By maintaining a very calm environment for the cows, he keeps the milking parlor area clean. The cows haven't manured in the parlor in at least two and a half months.

Clover Mead Farm's milking cows nibble their grain before going out to pasture for the day. The Farmstead Creamery is in the background. The farm and the cheese produced are certified organic.

Sam Hendren of the Farmstead Creamery at Clover Mead Farm stirs the cheese starter culture into milk in his cheese vat. Certified organic cheddar cheese and cheese curd are produced at this farm in the Town of Chesterfield in Essex County. Photos by Beth Spaugh.

Sam makes cheese three days a week. When I got there for my tour, the milk was in the pasteurizer/cheese vat so we donned hair nets, lab coats, and cheese room boots, then stepped on a sanitizing mat as we entered. The cheese curd is made from pasteurized milk, but the cheddar, feta, and Appenzellar are raw milk cheeses. The pasteurizer/cheese vat is a double duty piece of equipment. It was in use as a cheese vat for making English-style cheddar cheese Tuesday when I was there.

To start the cheddar cheese, the milk in the cheese vat is heated to 86 degrees Fahrenheit (F). He inoculates the milk with a bacterial starter culture that looks like bread yeast granules and lets it set for an hour. Then he adds rennet that makes the milk turn the consistency of thick yogurt as the bacteria consume the lactose in the milk, now called "curd."

Cheese "harps," frames strung with what looked like monofilament fishing line, are used to slice the curd into peanut sized cubes. This curd is then slowly heated to 100 degrees F and held there for half an hour while it is stirred constantly. Whey is expelled from the curds during this process and protein is concentrated in the curds. The whey is then drained off and the curds are stacked into clumps to further drain and compress, a process called "cheddaring."

The curds are then salted and put into press molds for about 36 hours. The wheels of cheese are taken out of the molds and allowed to dry for 24 hours. Then the wheels are coated with a clear wax sealant and put in the cooler to age. Sam is also making cheeses with different types of rinds, including cloth.

That's how the cheese is made, but dairy farmers may wonder what the profitability and economics looks like. Sam makes about 200 pounds of cheese in 2 and 15 pound wheels each week. Commercial scale (as opposed to artisanal or small farmstead) organic cheddar cheese is selling for $8 per pound. Although his cheese certainly is "artisanal," Sam retails his cheddar cheese for $8 per pound, and wholesales it for $5 per pound so it will be affordable for the general public. This is about equivalent to a farmer getting $60 per CWT for his milk, rather than the $10 per CWT dairy farmers are getting.

Sam sells his fresh cheese curd, mild English-style cheddar, and feta and applewood smoked feta. His Appenzellar cheese needs to age longer before the first batch will be available.

There is $11 billion of cheese sold in the U.S. each year. Certainly there is room for some small cheesemakers, particularly to replace some of the cheese imported from overseas. There are at least 30 farmstead cheesemakers in Vermont. It's nice to think that Essex and Clinton counties of New York could be dotted with small farmstead cheese plants.

Sam is committed to trying to revitalize family farms and the communities that depended on them. He is active in the Adirondack Harvest efforts to link local farmers with consumers and help consumers identify local farm products to buy. He is also willing to help others interested in starting a small farmstead creamery. He would love to see a farmstead creamery, with its own distinctive products and characteristics, in every town in Clinton and Essex counties.

To find out where to purchase The Farmstead Creamery's cheese or to get information about starting your own farmstead creamery, call Sam Hendren at (518) 834-7306 or e-mail him at hendren@northnet.org. An organic food home delivery service near New York City is carrying their cheese. They have also joined the Campaign for Real Milk and will be listed on the Website at www.real-milk.com and are starting a local chapter.

'Small Farm Boosters' Are On Rise In Extension

ONEONTA, N.Y. — For decades, the conventional wisdom handed down to farmers from government, lenders, agribusiness and many farm advisers was more or less along the lines of "get big or get out."

But the tremendous ingenuity, creativity, and sheer persistence of small-scale farmers has become apparent, especially in the last couple of decades, and we're beginning to realize that there are lots of ways farmers can "stay small and stay in."

And there are lots of ways beginning farmers can "go small and get in." Small farms are here to stay.

Small farms have always been an important part of Cornell Cooperative Extension (CCE's) audience. In many counties, virtually all farms are small. Sometimes small farms feel they're not getting the attention and support they deserve from extension.

But increasingly, CCE educators are seeing the state's smaller farms as a "growth area" for local agriculture and extension programming, as well as an exciting and rewarding audience to work with.

For example, 53 different extension projects have been funded in the last three years by the CCE Grants Program for Innovative Small Farms Education, for a total of $131,610.

Recently a group of Cornell Cooperative Extension "Small Farms Boosters" met at Hartwick College in Oneonta, N.Y., to share ideas about how to strengthen their educational programming for smaller farms. Sponsored by Cornell's Small Farms Task Group, the meeting featured a presentation and discussion with Dr. John Ikerd, professor emeritus of agricultural economics at the University of Missouri.

Ikerd has written extensively about small farms and sustainable agriculture, arguing that small farms, not large industrialized farms, are the future for agriculture in most rural communities. The paper he presented at the CCE retreat can be viewed at www.smallfarms.cornell.edu. Click on "About Small Farms" and then click on "Contributions of Small Farms."

"Our purpose was to gather a small group of highly dedicated extension educators — people who are enthusiastic about small farms and have a lot of experience working with them," said Joanna Green, extension associate with Cornell's Small Farms Program. "The discussion was part of our ongoing effort to strengthen Cornell's support for small farms."

The Cornell Small Farms Task Group has developed a set of suggestions for extension program planning for small farms. To view the recommendations, go to www.smallfarms.cornell.edu. Click on "Working With Small Farms," then click on "Educational Programming."

NESARE Announces $660,000 For Research, Education

ITHACA, N.Y. — The Northeast Sustainable Agriculture Research and Education (NESARE) program located at the University of Vermont in Burlington has announced its research and education awards for 2003. Funds will support a total of 16 research, demonstration, and education projects support the long-term viability and sustainability of farms and farming in the northeast region.

NESARE characterizes sustainable agriculture as profitable, environmentally sound, and making important contributions to the community in which it resides.

Seven farmers will share approximately $42,600 to conduct on-farm research. The grants were awarded based on their relevance, innovation, and promise to contribute to sustaining farming operations across the northeast. NESARE awarded a total of $268,744 to farmer/grower projects in the Northeast. Awards for New York are Peter Anderson; Long Eddy, N.Y.; compost mounds and no-till for pumpkins; Michael Glos; Berkshire, N.Y.; season extension for organic culinary herbs; Ron Khosia; New Paltz, N.Y.; low cost electric seeding and culivating tractor; Bi-Co View Farm; Munnsville, N.Y.; heated beds for dairy cows; Chris Pawelski, Goshen, N.Y.; commercial spring salad mix for Muckland; Matthias Reisen; Avoca, N.Y.; organic high production of medicinal herbs; Fred Forsburg; vinegar as an organic herbicide for garlic.

NESARE awarded $2,255,075 to 19 researchers in the Northeast who will explore topics as diverse as exploring reduced tillage techniques for vegetables, controlling mites in honeybees, and linking local food sources with local schools both in the cafeteria and the curriculum. Awards totaling approximately $568,000 will support four projects in New York:

• Soil health assessment, management, and training: Vegetable production systems. George Abawi, New York State Agricultural Experiment Station, Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y. As soil is depleted, growers increase their use of fertilizers, pesticides, tillage, and irrigation to maintain acceptable yield, all of which have led to more interest in soil assessment and improvement to save money and labor. The project leader will assess the soil health on 50 to 100 vegetable farms and establish demonstration trials in the adoption of sustainable, biologically based soil management. An assessment protocol, Website, and materials kit for educators will be developed, and farmer adoption and economic impact will be tracked and analyzed.

• Determining the commercial viability of an exclusionary production system using disease-resistant columnar apple and sweet cherry cultivars. Peter Jentsch, Cornell University's Hudson Valley Lab, Highland, N.Y. Apples are pesticide-dependent, and costs for pesticides run $400 an acre in the Hudson Valley. The project manager will grow disease-resistant columnar apple and dwarfing sweet cherry trees in five different orchards using a v-trellis high-density system, integrating mulches, irrigation, a fixed-canopy spray system, and supports for barrier netting. These sites will be use to familiarize fruit growers with an integrated system that will protect against hail and discourage pests without the use of synthetic pesticides.

• Optimizing reduced tillage systems for vegetables grown in the upper Northeast. Anusuya Rangarajan, Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y. The cool climate in the northern part of the region often makes no-till difficult, since the soil takes a long time to warm. The project manager will use on-farm and experiment-station research, workshops, and field demonstrations to promote reduced-tillage strategies specific to the climate and soil of this area. At least five techniques will be tested, and vegetable farmers will learn about and adopt the ones best suited to their farms. Case studies will capture the experiences of individual farmers as they adopt reduce tillage practices and will be used for further outreach and education.

• Beach plum: A new crop for new markets. Thomas Whitlow, Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y. This continues a previous SARE project, LNE01-153, which focuses on beach plum as a low-input sustainable crop suitable for adding value. The project leader will build a marketing consortium and focus on market research, business planning, and producer, chef, and processor workshops. A Beach Plum Consortium Council will support and oversee marketing, and the emphasis will be on quality niche markets and responding to consumer preference for a wild-flavored jam with a distinctive regional identity. The overall goal is to continue building product quality and consumer interest in beach plum products.

NESARE partnership grants are awarded to agricultural professionals who work directly with farmers. The grants are for demonstration, research and marketing projects that relate directly to the long-term sustainability of farming and agriculture in the northeast region. In 2003 16 grants totaling $150,000 were awarded. Six Cornell Cooperative Extension Educators received grants totaling $48,000 for work in New York State:

• Alternative continuous cover forage crop systems for the Northeast. Paul Cerosaletti, Cornell Cooperative Extension of Delaware County, N.Y., and Lisa Fields, Cornell Cooperative Extension of Schoharie County, N.Y. Dairy farmers in south-central New York often grow their own forage, but struggle to establish cover crops needed to mediate soil loss. The project leaders will see whether sorghum sudangrass, interseeded with small grain cover crops and perennial forages, will provide a continuous cover, and whether winter rye and triticale will reestablish sods in no-corn, conventional-till fields. Four cooperating farmers will plant and harvest various mixes, and the results will be analyzed in terms of production costs, plant success, and milk production.

• Regional compost network. Aaron Gabriel, Cornell Cooperative Extension, Hudson Falls, N.Y. One of the challenges of composting is logisticalconnecting composters with waste generators, moving organic waste, and developing the community infrastructure needed to make composting viable. The project leader will develop case studies of compost facilities on area farms as well as profiles of waste generators. The leader will also recruit participants for a regional composting network and seek out economical ways for municipalities to transport yard waste and leaves to farms for composting. A directory of composting resources will be developed for the Cornell cooperative extension Website and will also be distributed in printed form.

• Development of improved controlled-atmosphere storage techniques for gooseberries and red currants. Steven McKay, Cornell Cooperative Extension, Hudson, N.Y. Gooseberries and currents have shown promise as alternatives to traditional fruit crops, and can diversify a farm. The project leader will explore how to best use controlled-atmosphere (CA) storage techniques to make the most of the berry crops, and the trials will specifically compare traditional CA pallet-storage to self-conditioning poly bags, which are reusable and require no external machinery. Several varieties of berries will be tested, and the results will be disseminated through extension publications, a farm newsletter, and the Website of the International Ribes Association.

• Grass-based poultry production. Lynn O'Brien, Cornell Cooperative Extension of Allegany and Cattaraugus Counties, Belmont, N.Y. Consumer preference for quality food is constrained by a lack of local and affordable processing capacity. The project leader will develop and demonstrate, in conjunction with two skilled farmers, a portable poultry processing lab as an education and outreach tool. The goal is to support diversification and competitiveness. Flock management and hands-on processing training will be offered, and the results will be disseminated to extension and directly to farmers.

• Developing successful direct marketing strategies for agricultural producers in Washington County. Paula Schafer, Cornell Cooperative Extension of Washington and Saratoga counties, Hudson Falls, N.Y. Producer interest in direct marketing is growing, and the project leader will identify and support farmers who are interested in adopting new techniques. Ongoing effortsworkshops, a culinary event, and a program for part-time farmerswill be supplemented by the creation of a county farm guide that lists farms, products, contact information, and other information for consumers. The publication will be distributed at farmers' markets, festivals, through tourism offices, and electronically. Results will be tracked through changes in sales and farmer feedback, and will be reported in the agricultural media.

The certification is based upon a rigid scorecard of management skills, education, and leadership. The award designation was made May 4 in Williamsburg, Va. during the IAFE Annual Spring Management Conference.

Drawing from more than 3,200 organized fairs in the U.S. and Canada, 20 fair executives qualified for the CFE award in 2003.

Dennis L. Grumbine is a native of Myerstown and has been with the Pennsylvania Farm Show since 1978. Previously, he served as a commission member for 17 years.

Grumbine served as executive director during the $90 million dollar expansion project that was accomplished in 11 months. Under his directing, the annual Farm Show experienced a 75 percent growth in attendance. Grumbine is well known in the agriculture community and has received numerous awards from major agriculture and livestock organizations. He is also a member of the Pennsylvania Livestock Hall of Fame.

4-H Honors Volunteers With 'Salute To Excellence' Awards

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — Two Pennsylvania residents recently were chosen as outstanding volunteers by 4-H as part of the organization's "Salute to Excellence" recognition program.

The program honors individuals who serve as the best examples of 4-H volunteers by showing dedication and hard work, and by having significant positive influence on youth. The Lifetime Volunteer Award is conferred upon an individual who has spent more than 10 years volunteering for 4-H. The Volunteer of the Year Award is presented to an individual who has served with 4-H for less than 10 years.

Mary Ellen (Ellie) Bard of Portage, Cambria County, was chosen as Pennsylvania's 2003 Lifetime Volunteer Award winner. Bard has participated in numerous 4-H projects and activities since childhood.

An active 4-H leader in Cambria County for more than 20 years, she currently leads the Pleasant Hill Swine Club, the South Ebensburg Community Club and the Cambria County Lamb Club. She has been a member of the state's 4-H Program Advisory Committee since 1985 and spearheaded the creation of the annual Cambria County 4-H Sausage Sale fund-raiser.

Bard has organized and run the 4-H Roadside Clean-Up project with the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation for 19 years. She also organized "Project Blue Bird Box" with the 4-H Woodworking Club and the County Conservation District for the 2002 4-H Centennial.

Rick Perry of Kennerdell, Venango County, was selected as Pennsylvania's 2003 Volunteer of the Year. Perry has been volunteering for four years and currently serves with the Seneca Indians 4-H Club.

While mainly guiding youth involved in beef cattle care, he also has mentored young people with a variety of interests. Rick is a member of the Venango County 4-H Leaders and is a past fair board director of the 4-H Fair Inc. Through his involvement in these committees, he has helped to initiate a Rate of Gain program for 4-H beef, encouraged a broader awards system for young participants and worked to develop the local 4-H fairgrounds.

The 4-H Salute to Excellence Awards were created in 2002 by Gene and Sharon Swackhamer to emphasize the important work of 4-H volunteers across the nation. They are supported by the Salute to Excellence Fund, which provides donors with the opportunity to recognize 4-H volunteer leaders who have made an impact on their 4-H experiences.

Brubakers Host Farmland Trust

Officials Announce $5 Million For Green Energy

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — Several officials gathered at Rocky Knoll Farm Thursday afternoon to announce a $5 million initiative, Pennsylvania Energy Harvest, which leaders hope will encourage clean and renewable energy projects.

The initiative is open to farmers, local governments, conservation districts, nonprofit organizations, businesses, schools, and universities.

Projects that could qualify for funding include the following:

- Using biomass, which includes organic/renewable material for electricity generation.
- Wind farms to produce power
- Using waste coal to produce energy
- Small-scale solar power systems in rural areas such as pumping water to livestock or at traffic signals.

Harlan Keener, former owner of Rocky Knoll Farm, a 4,500-head hog operation, had installed a methane digester on the property in 1985.

The digester, fed by food waste mixed with bacteria, has not only produced electricity but also dramatically reduced odor on the farm, which is three miles from center city Lancaster.

The operation sells its extra electricity.

Kathleen McGinty, Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) secretary designee, hopes that the initiative will help producers "replicate the success story we see here (at Rocky Knoll Farm).

Although the grant money offers economic and environmental benefits, "in my mind, it's also a question of national security," she said, pointing out how much foreign oil can be saved through alternative energy generation.

Sen. Gib Armstrong noted that the funds "will make Pennsylvania a model for other states looking to support constructive alternative fuel projects," he said.

Guy Donaldson, president, Pennsylvania Farm Bureau, said that the money "could not have come at a better time. This is another means for Pennsylvania producers to enhance their operations" and also receive economic benefits, he said.

"I am pleased to support Pennsylvania Energy Harvest. By utilizing clean and renewable energy technology, farmers can reduce costs, increase profitability, and protect the environment at the same time," secretary Wolff said.

The project is part of a plan to help the state meet 10 percent of its energy needs with "green power."

"The potential impact this could have on the state's agricultural community and energy market makes it worth the effort," said Rep. Scott Boyd.

"Fostering still-untapped renewable energy sources and creating viable economic uses for manure" is critical to Pennsylvania's waterways and the bay, said Matt Erhart, Chesapeake Bay foundation's Pennsylvania executive director.

Andrew McElwaine, president of the Pennsylvania Environmental Council, said that the grant program is a three-point shot for the environment" as "it will improve air quality by encouraging cleaner energy; it will protect our water resources by creating power out of farm and coal waste that might otherwise become pollution; and it will keep farmers on the land who might otherwise have to sell for development."

Deadline to apply for the initiative is Sept. 19, 2003.

For more information about the Pennsylvania Energy Harvest grant, visit www.state.pa.us and use the keyword 2003 Energy Harvest Grant, or call (717) 705-5400.

Harlan Keener explains the workings of the equipment to Dennis Wolff, secretary of agriculture, and Kathleen McGinty, DEP secretary designee.

THIS WEEK	2595	1145
LAST WEEK	2571	1398
LAST YEAR	3263	1288

Compared to last week, slaughter steers sold mostly steady, with Choice sales .50 lower late in the week The only prices that were noted as higher this week were on the lower quality grades early in the week, and on the Prime steers late in the week, but only on select sales. The steer supplies in Lancaster County remain heavy, as steer receipts topped over 1100 head this week. Local producers are cleaning out their barns as we head into summer, although most of the steers are coming out about 200 lbs lighter than normal as the dry summer of 2002 finally takes its toll on the feed supplies. The cost of hay and corn do not justify continued feeding of these lighter steers, as even the lower quality grades are trading for as much as 77.00 The Western direct feed yards moved their live steers steady to 1.00 higher this week from 78.00-79 00, and at mostly 126 00 dressed The May live cattle contract at the Merc remains at around a 2 00-3 00 discount to the cash trade, currently trading at 76 20 The July and August contracts are in the upper 60.00 money, and have kept a little bearishness in the finished market, although prices remain very good for fat cattle both at the local and national level Holstein steers sold 1 00 higher early in the week, only to face the first losses in weeks on Thursday as prices were mostly 1.00 lower Slaughter cows sold weak to 3 00 lower early in the week, with most losses on the fleshier (65-75 percent lean) cows Most of the undertone in the cow market early in the week is due to the light buyer demand Fleshy cows sold 1 00-2 00 higher on Thursday as buyer attendance improved, with Lean cows trading 50-1.00 higher The cow supplies are thinning out as most cows are being turned out on grass, and as long as they remain healthy enough to give a few pounds of milk per day farmers are not bringing them to town as most are busy with field work The supply this week included 1117 head of steers, 151 heifers, 915 cows, 163 bulls, with 249 head of feeder cattle

Draft Horse, Mule Assoc. Meets

LINDA WILLIAMS
Bedford Co. Correspondent

ROARING SPRING (Blair County) — Terry (Woody) and Dr. Gail Woodring hosted the annual Pennsylvania Draft Horse and Mule Association on a recent spring day on their farm.

About 70 people attended from all parts of the state.

"It's a sharing experience," says Gail. "We teach others how to ride, breed, make money with draft horses, and share experiences."

While the event began on Saturday, those who stayed over for Sunday enjoyed a wagon train ride. A skillet breakfast of potatoes, sausage, onion, and eggs started the day.

Events throughout Saturday included a program on proper feeding presented by Mark F. James, DVM and Linda Thorns talking about show braiding and tail tying.

Terry Woodring showed his guests how to properly fit and harness a draft horse.

During the afternoon, 4-H members learned how to properly show a draft horse and lessons in driving were given.

"I remember participating in one of those driving classes," smiles Gail Woodring. "I could barely drive one in the beginning. By the end of the weekend, I was driving a team of six."

"We do just about anything a draft horse can do," says Shannon Maning from York. "We show them, ride them, drive them.

"I already know a lot but still learned a few things at this meeting," she says. Shannon has Percherons.

Tammy Furry from New Enterprise has Clydesdales. "I use them for raking hay, plowing, hauling manure, weddings, and picnics," she says. Tammy grew up in a family with draft horses and fell in love with them at an early age.

She was working with Judge Jess Darlington from Centre Hall in teaching 4-H members how to show their horses.

"We just think it's been a great weekend," Terry Woodring said as he turned around to show off his t-shirt which read, "Life is simple. Eat, sleep, drive horses!"

Woody Woodring and Leonard Furry show off their t-shirts while they harness a Clydesdale.

Momma's Cooking Stirs Memories

Mother's are cherished for many reasons and Mother's Day on Sunday will remind many people to express that appreciation to their moms, grandmoms, and other special females in their lives.

One of the most-often mentioned attribute that many children and grownups express is "Mamma's cooking" — considered the best.

Here are some recipes from our readers who associate fond memories with the cooking of their mothers, grandmothers, and mother-in-laws. Many readers can probably identify with Sandy Alderfer who writes of the recipe that she contributed: "There is nothing special about this recipe, but it makes me feel connected to all my family bakers who have taught me so much."

GRAPE JUICE PUDDING

1 quart grape juice, sweetened
2 tablespoons unflavored gelatin
8 ounces cream cheese, softened
2 cups whipped cream

Soften gelatin in ½ cup grape juice, heat remaining juice to boiling then add softened gelatin. Cool until slightly jelled. Whip cream cheese into whipped cream and add to grape juice.

This is a recipe that my husband asked me to get from his mother, Mary Wenger. We live on the next farm to my in-laws and I feel fortunate to have such good neighbors.

Happy Mother's Day!

Cheryl Wenger

BAKED CASSEROLE

2 cups cooked diced potatoes
1 cup cooked peas
2 cups spam

Place vegetables and meat in 2 quart casserole dish. Mix white sauce and pour over all.

White Sauce:

¼ cup butter
¼ cup flour
2 cups milk

Melt butter and stir in flour. Slowly add milk cooking until thickened.

Mix 1½ cup cracker crumbs and 2 tablespoons melted butter. Sprinkle on top of casserole and bake at 350° for 45 minutes.

My mom, Anna Fox, made this casserole often while I was growing up. We thought it was really good. When I was learning to cook, around age 12, this was a recipe I could handle. Mom would cook the potatoes in their jackets before she went to work in the morning. After school I would peel and dice the cooled potatoes and mix up the rest of it, then I'd have supper ready for mom.

GRANNY'S COOKIES

1½ cups flour
1 teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup shortening
¾ cup brown sugar
¾ cup white sugar
2 eggs unbeaten
1 teaspoon hot water
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 cup chopped walnuts
1 12-ounce package chocolate chips
2 cups oatmeal

Combine flour, soda, and salt. Cream shortening. Add sugars gradually. Add eggs, beating after addition. Add hot water. Then dry ingredients. Add nuts and chips, and then oatmeal. Mix throughly.

Bake 375° for 8 minutes.

This is long time favorite with my 84-year-old mother, Anne Ahlborn. It was given to her by my dad's mother many years ago. My daughter's return to college always included a container of Granny's Cookies.

HOT MILK SPONGE CAKE

2 cups flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup milk
4 tablespoons butter
4 eggs
2 cups sugar
2 teaspoons vanilla

Sift together flour, baking powder, and salt. Heat milk and butter until butter melts, keep hot. Beat eggs until thick and lemon colored, about 3 minutes on high speed. Gradually add sugar, beating constantly at medium speed for 4-5 minutes. Add sifted dry ingredients to egg mixture, stir just until blended. Stir in hot milk mixture and vanilla, blend well.

Turn batter into greased and floured 10x13-inch pan. Bake at 350° for 25-30 minutes. Don't invert, cool in pan.

This was my great-grandmother's recipe, Alice (Billman) Brobst, who was born in 1878. She baked it for her 9 children to enjoy. At a family reunion, I was surprised to find that many family members still bake it for their families to enjoy. There is nothing special about this recipe but it makes me feel connected to all of my family bakers who have taught me so much. My family likes this cake plain with sliced strawberries or sprinkled with confectioners' sugar. You can also frost it with your favorite icing.

COCONUT OATMEAL COOKIES

1 cup shortening
1 cup brown sugar
1 cup + 2 tablespoons flour
1 teaspoon soda
¼ teaspoon salt
1-2 cups flaked coconut
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
1 teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 cups quick cooking oatmeal

Cream shortening and sugars; add eggs and vanilla. Cream well. Add dry ingredients together with oatmeal and coconut.

Drop on greased cookie sheet and bake at 350° for about 10 minutes.

Mother's Day Tribute Showcases Mother-Son Dairy Partnership

Bonnie Kiser hugs her son John, 26, and daughter Amber, 14. The trio works hard to achieve success with a 40-head herd. "Everyone thinks you got to be big, but you don't — you just need to be efficient," Bonnie said of dairy farming successfully.

LOU ANN GOOD
Food And Family Features Editor

LITITZ (Lancaster Co.) — On Mother's Day, most children take time to thank their mothers for things that they appreciate. But John and Amber Kiser don't wait for one day a year to express their gratitude to their mom, Bonnie Kiser.

"Almost every day I think of how my mom makes it possible for me to farm," said John. "I couldn't do it without her."

He's referring to his dream of dairy farming. While many sons and fathers form partnerships, the Kisers have a more unique position — a mother and son partnership.

"My mom is the best partner I could have," John said. "It probably wouldn't work well if I had employees — I'm too picky."

They own 40 head of milking herd (Mega Star Holsteins), which they raise on a rented farm in the Lititz area.

"Everyone thinks you got to be big, but you don't — you just need to be efficient," Bonnie said of dairy farming.

She grew up the youngest of seven children on a dairy farm in York County.

"My parents did not encourage any of us (siblings) to farm. They thought it was too hard of a life."

None of her siblings pursued a farming career, but over the years Bonnie often milked cows at large dairy complexes.

"I learned a lot about what to do and what not to do for a successful operation through those experiences," Bonnie said.

"I believe it is important to pay attention to small details. If you do, it definitely pays off," she said. "If the milker needs repair — do it immediately. If a cow is sick, treat it. You won't have income unless you have production, and you can't get production if you don't take care of your cows and equipment."

John's dream to farm was birthed from accompanying his grandfather to auctions and helping him feed steers.

During his five years in York County 4-H, John showed raised heifer and beef projects. In 1991, the Kisers moved to Lancaster County. John joined FFA at Solanco High School. He raised steers, hogs, and cows for animal projects and was a member of the land judging team, which placed first in the state and went on to national competition in Oklahoma City. While still in high school, John got a job helping with the evening and weekend milking on a Lancaster County dairy farm.

By the time John was graduated from Solanco High School in 1995, he had accumulated 12 Holsteins. One year later, he and his mom, who is divorced, purchased a 50-head herd from the farm where his mother worked.

"It seemed like a good idea to buy cows we knew. Mom milked the cows and I did the feeding. We split the milk check with the farm owner," John said.

For several years they remained on the farm where the herd had been raised.

Eager to become more independent, the Kisers took advantage of a better deal by renting facilities in Little Britain.

They moved the cows from the freestall facility to a tiestall barn

SHOO-FLY CAKE

4 cups flour
1 pound of brown sugar
1 cup margarine
2 cups boiling water
1 cup molasses
2 teaspoons baking soda

Combine flour, sugar, and margarine. Reserve 1 cup for top. Add the rest of ingredients to flour mixture. Mix well until batter is thin.

Put in a 9x13-inch pan and sprinkle with crumbs. Bake at 350° for 30-40 minutes.

This is one of the first cakes my mother, Ruth Rutt, taught me to make. It is a favorite to our four boys too. We are so thankful to have such a kind and thoughtful mother and grandmother. Happy Mother's Day.

RICE PUDDING

1 cup uncooked rice
1 cup water
2¼ cups milk
½ cup sugar
2 tablespoons butter

In a medium saucepan combine rice and water. Heat to boiling. Reduce heat and simmer, covered 8-10 minutes or until liquid is absorbed. Stirring occasionally (rice will not be done). Add milk and sugar. Cook uncovered over low heat 30-35 minutes or until most of milk is absorbed and rice is tender. Stirring occasionally.

In a small skillet or saucepan, heat butter over low heat until melted. Continue heating until butter turns a delicate brown.

Anne Ahlborn is the mother of Grace Beck.

Pour butter over warm rice before serving. Makes 6 servings.

This is very, very, very good! It is even good cold. This recipe can be doubled or tripled.

Send Your Favorite Dairy Recipe For June Dairy Month Drawing

LOU ANN GOOD
Food And Family
Features Editor

EPHRATA (Lancaster Co.) — June Dairy Month is "mooving" into the calendar of events. That means it's time to send in your favorite recipe using dairy products for Lancaster Farming's annual dairy recipe drawing.

June Dairy Month salutes dairy farmers everywhere for their hard work in providing milk, which we so often take for granted.

Lancaster Farming's annual drawing reminds us of the wonderful dairy products available to produce culinary delights.

To enter the drawing, select your favorite recipe, which must include a substantial amount of at least one dairy product. These ingredients count as a dairy product: milk, cream, sour cream, whipped cream, butter, yogurt, buttermilk, dry milk, ice cream, and all hard and soft cheeses.

Please check your ingredients carefully. Margarine and nondairy substitutes such as frozen whipped topping do not qualify as dairy products.

Dairy recipes are needed for appetizers, soups, breads, entrees, vegetables, desserts, beverages, snacks, and salads.

Clearly print or type your recipe entry. Be sure to give accurate measurements, temperatures, cooking and baking times, sizes of baking dishes to use, and other beneficial information. We reserve the right to disqualify entries if these guidelines are not followed.

With your entry, include a few paragraphs about yourself and your family. Although it is not required, a photograph of you and your family is preferred. We and our readers love to "see" the people who send in the recipe.

Photographs will be returned if you write your name and address on the back of the photo.

Only one entry per family allowed. This contest is for adults who are 18 years old and older. We require this age because children who send in recipes often inadvertently miss measurements, ingredients, or parts of the instructions.

Send your recipe, photo, and accompanying information with your complete address; otherwise, we cannot mail your prize if you win. We are astonished when we see how many people do not include their full address and therefore forfeit receiving a prize.

Send entries immediately. Entries must be postmarked by June 2 to be eligible for the drawing.

On Being a Farm Wife

(and other hazards)

Tiny purple blooms, each with a white dot in the center, are a Mother's Day reminder.

The flower clusters of purple verbena dangle gracefully at the ends of stems spilling out of a hanging basket. With blossoms of one of my mother's favorite colors, the verbena was a thoughtful gift from a family friend a year ago. The kind gesture paid honor to her life, which had peacefully ended a few months earlier.

When I remarked recently that the plant had happily wintered the year's brutal cold in our chilly greenhouse and was again covered with flowers, our friend observed that it meant mother is still around.

"Actually, mother's popping up all over the place," I replied, gesturing toward the yard where an assortment of transplanted bulbs and perennials from her garden were coming to life. In fact, I've found several plants I'd forgotten moving in places I'd forgotten to putting them.

Flowers and gardening were mother's pastime, keeping her active and working outside until literally her last day of life. It was a passion we shared, walking the yard on each visit during all but the worst weather to check what was blooming, budded, or poking up out of the ground. So it was personally important to preserve and perpetuate many of her beloved plants.

Towering over its perennial neighbors in the border edging one side of the lawn is a white dogwood tree. Mom dug the dogwood several years ago from the wooded area of their property, a haven started by a prior owner who filled it with shade lovers like dogwoods, wild azalea, and rhodendrons. Just a two-foot sapling when we moved it, the dogwood is now a healthy eight-footer with spreading branches, covered appropriately this past week with blooms.

Another living legacy from mother are several thick clumps of peony foliage, their sturdy stems fattening round buds on the ends. She really enjoyed a long hedge of pink peonies which was the beauty of the neighborhood when it was in full blossom, and never failed to send visitors away with an armful of the fat, fragant flowers when they were at their prettiest in late May.

An old-fashioned bleeding heart is dangling valentine-shaped, two-toned pink blooms in a semi-shaded bed viewed from a kitchen window. When I took the bleeding heart plant to her on a Mother's Day several years ago, mom handed it back and asked me to plant it in my garden for her. Now it has a similar neighbor, not yet blooming, but hopefully a youngster of the pure-white version she also grew.

A clump of foliage in the same bed, pushing long stems with fat round buds at the top, caught me by surprise when I spied it a few days ago. After a little mental searching, I remembered digging the clump of alliums, or "flowering onions," which appear happy in their new location. It's probably appropriate that its neighboring columbine and astilbe, sweet violets in several different colors, the lilies-of-the-valley, the bleeding hearts have put down roots near the old bird bath also salvaged from mother's garden. Even one of her prized rhubarb stalks has settled in at a corner of one bed.

Mother taught me many things — household skills like cooking, canning and sewing, a love of reading and words, and the philosophy of making do with what was available and doing without if necessary. But, in our joint maturity, it was flowers and gardening that we shared with the most fervor.

White and purple lilacs blooming in the yard, the iris we traded back and forth pushing out buds, daylilies spreading their sturdy selves, stalks of yucca and perennial geranium thriving on the bank of the goldfish pond, bring to mind the refrain of a popular country song. The lyrics note that what's important from a life is not what you take, but what you leave behind you, when you go.

Our Mother's Day flowers this year will be from the green legacy left behind by one whose teachings to her children to "bloom where you are planted" continue to grow on.

Not only is she popping up all over around here, but she's multiplying as well.

When Guil Waddell isn't using his AGCO ST45 compact tractor to mow grass or haul round bales on his 25-acre horse ranch, he's putting it to work as owner of GTW Landscaping in Rougemont, NC

"With the price of gas the way it is, I don't want to be towing a 5,000- to 7,000-pound tractor around on a trailer," he says. "That's one reason I like the AGCO compact so well. It has enough power and weight to handle heavy 3-point hitch implements; yet it's light enough to haul around on the job."

Jams, Jelly, Family Traditions

I spent last weekend visiting with my family. My parents and my sister, Sue and her family, live in the northeastern part of Pennsylvania in my hometown, Montrose. As usual there were more things to do and talk about than time allows, but we get in as much as possible before I had to leave for the three-hour trip home to Lancaster. We shopped, hiked, talked, and ate.

Dad commented that nearly all the food for dinner came out of their freezer or was home canned by Mom. The only thing not home preserved was fresh asparagus from the garden. As long as I can remember, we have had a garden and my parents either canned or froze any garden excess for the winter. Of course, our favorites included the jams and jellies we made. Over the weekend we were comparing notes about which ones were the best and how jelly making has changed.

We always had strawberry and raspberry jam made from berries in the garden and blackberries from the woods. We also made currant-raspberry jelly since we had a red currant bush (a piece off Grandma Hallstead's currant bush from the farm). This tangy jelly is still one of my favorites. And, the currants are easy to pick.

The blackberry patches were full of pickers. Protected with our jeans and long-sleeved shirts, we walked to back on the hill to find the juiciest blackberries. Dad made each of us buckets by attaching a wire handle to a coffee can. He would tie his bucket to his belt so he could pick with both hands. In no time his bucket was full. Mom, on the other hand, picked slower, but she "looked over" each berry before she put it in the bucket so there are no stray leaves, bugs, or damaged berries in the lot. My bucket filled slower, because I did a lot of sampling.

Even as kids we helped make the jams and jellies. Mom recycled small glass jars from mustard, olives, maraschino cherries, and cheese spreads to use for jelly and jam. I don't think pint mason jars were available in those days, at least I never recall seeing any. We filled all the jars and covered the top with paraffin wax. Mom had a small iron skillet she used to melt the paraffin. I liked to open the jars of jam by pushing on one side of the wax seal and watch it pop off. We washed the wax disk and put it back in the little skillet to use next year. Sometimes we would find some mold under the wax seal, and then the jam was thrown away.

Jam-making techniques have come a long way since my days living at home. The recycled mustard and olive jars have been replaced by 4 ounces and half-pint mason jars. Instead of the paraffin seal, we use two-piece canning lids and process all jams and jellies in a boiling water bath.

Today we also know that mold growth may not be as harmless as it was believed in the past. USDA and Cooperative Extension endorse processing all jams and jellies and soft spreads in a boiling water bath to keep the potential for mold spoilage as small as possible. Some molds growing on fruit products made at home have been shown to produce "mycotoxins" or mold poisons. The danger to humans from consuming mycotoxins, from moldy jars of jams is not clear, although one mycotoxin, patulin, has been shown to be carcinogenic in animals.

Paraffin or wax sealing of jars is no longer considered an acceptable choice for any sweet spread. Any pinholes, shrinkage or cracks in the wax paraffin allow airborne molds to contaminate and grow on the product. In addition, leaks or holes in the paraffin can allow product to seep out during storage and once on the surface, it will provide nutrients for molds to grow on the surface and enter into the jam or jelly in the jar.

In order to get the highest quality, least health and safety risks and the lowest chance of losing product, use standard canning jars, with self-sealing flat metal lids and screw bands, fill hot jars with hot product and process in a boiling water bath at least 5 minutes.

Today Mom makes many more frozen jams. We especially like the frozen cherry made from sour cherries we picked last summer. These jams are sweeter than the cooked jams but have more of the fresh fruit flavors.

Although the techniques of food preservation have changed since I was growing up in Montrose, the family traditions of making jams and jellies have remained the same. My children and I have been making jam and jellies for our family and friends since they were small. It is something we do together and that makes it special.

The "Stream Map of Pennsylvania" was completed in 1965 after a 30 year effort by Howard Higbee, a former Penn State Professor

Professor Higbee succeeded in creating a map of the highest detail possible. .a map that shows every stream and lake He painstakingly plotted by hand, the location of 45,000 miles of streams onto a 3 by 5 foot map

The map sold extremely well - until it was lost several years later. Incredibly, the printer entrusted with the original drawing and printing plates declared bankruptcy, then carelessly hauled Higbee's 30 years of work to the landfill.

The few remaining dog-eared copies became a prized fisherman's possession. Professor Higbee was offered $400 for one of his last maps. And state agencies were forced to keep their copies under lock and key.

The experts had always told Professor Higbee that reprints were impossible, because the maps were printed in non-photographic blue.

Then, in 1991, at the age of 91, Howard Higbee's dream came true. Computers made it possible to reprint the map. Holding an updated map, Howard said, "I never thought I'd live to see this day."

Then, by combining Professor Higbee's knowledge with computer technology -- the STREAM MAP OF OHIO was created.

for 73 head. But the cows had a hard time adapting to the switch.

Bonnie continued milking at home and for a neighboring dairy farmer. John started milking the cows on the herd that he and his mother owned in order to give his mom occasional time off to accompany Amber to shows, 4-H activities, and soccer games.

When an opportunity came up to rent smaller but more affordable facilities in Lititz, the Kisers took advantage of it. The barn has tunnel ventilation and mattresses, which have been great for cow comfort.

"I'd prefer to own my own farm, but it's pretty far out of reach at this point. This is a pretty good situation here and the cows are comfortable," John said.

The Kisers rent the barns, a little pasture, and half the house. Although the land is crop farmed by another farmer, John said that not farming the ground allows him to shop around to buy feed.

"When we first bought the cows, we used total mixed rations," John said. "Too many sales guys push their own products instead of recommending what is best for each cow."

The veterinarian used for herd health formulates rations, which John puts together.

Not growing the feed has its benefits. "We can put our money into our cows instead of equipment," John said.

The cows have adjusted to the move really well and average 70 pounds plus per day per cow.

The Kisers said they are very attached to their cows and have cow "families" they continue to develop.

All three family members make pets of the cows. "We know them all by name. We know which ones like to have their heads scratched and like to lick us," Bonnie said.

"We cull out the low end. I pick out the bulls, and Mom does the breeding," John said.

Bonnie also does a lot of the herd's vet work.

"But I'm quick to ask advice," Bonnie said of calling a veterinarian. "We haven't had any displaced abdomens for two years. We avoid a lot of problems with herd health by really being picky about little things."

Bonnie also does the morning and evening milking on the farm and works full time as ad-visor. That requires her to complete the 5:30 a.m. milking before rushing off to her 8 a.m. job, then hurrying home to complete the evening milking.

"I think my mom works too hard, but she's the best person to do it. She's quick — nobody can do it as fast as she does. And she's picky about prepping and milking the cows," John said.

Bonnie said, "I believe that a cow should be milked as soon as she is prepped, and that milking units should be removed as soon as a cow is finished to keep somatic cell counts low."

The Kisers also believe that it works best to have one person taking care of the daily milking.

"One person keeps things moving, and prevents mass confusion by having too many people standing around," he said.

The milk is shipped to Hershey's Chocolate via L.H. Burkhart through Land O' Lakes.

John said that his sister is very helpful with the herd. Amber takes care of the calves, and her 4-H projects, sheep, heifers, and dairy beef steers. She is vice president of the Lancaster County Dairy Beef Club, was named 4-H showmanship champion and reserve junior champion at various fairs last year. She enjoys doing her own fitting for shows at Solanco, Lampeter, and Manheim.

Amber said, "Living on a farm has taught me responsibility. I learn at shows that if I do things right, it pays off, and that showing doesn't just mean walking an animal around in the show ring. It requires paper-work."

For her detailed record keeping, Amber received a 4-H award for completing one of the top five record books in the county.

"And I learned the price of feed," she said. That's a requirement for business savvy, she believes.

Amber is in eighth grade at Warwick Middle School, and plays soccer for Lititz. Next year, Amber will transfer to Manheim Central so she can participate in FFA.

"I want to be a large animal vet," Amber said. She served as a dairy darling for Lancaster County, and is considering becoming a dairy ambassador for the county dairy industry.

"My mom is really supportive. She takes me to shows, 4-H and FFA meetings, and soccer practices. She's always here for us," Amber said.

Her brother added, "I think my mom works too hard. I know she's really doing this for us."

The mother-son team has a 50-50 partnership on the cows.

"I never would have been able to borrow the money without her," John said.

Amber desires to be a large animal veterinarian, and finds raising and showing dairy animals a step in that direction. Here she shows Babe, a 1½ year-old Ayrshire. Amber also owns Jersey and Holsteins.

The plan is that he will eventually assume full ownership.

John believes he has an advantage over most guys in partnership with their fathers. He said, "Fathers often own everything and aren't quick to hand over responsibility."

Bonnie said her contribution is worth it when she sees her children succeed. "The look on Amber's face in the show ring, and the satisfaction John has seeing the successful siring of cow families, is very rewarding."

Bonnie regrets that her parents (Daniel and Ruthetta Rohrbaugh) are deceased and unable to appreciate watching her son attain success in farming.

"Farming is something we enjoy, so it doesn't seem so much like work," she said. "If our children don't continue farming, what will the future hold?"

Bonnie wants to encourage her children to pursue farming if that is what they want to do.

"But I don't push it," she said. Another daughter Lydia, 16, lives with her dad in York County. Lydia has shown sheep for 4-H projects.

In addition to their mom's hard work in the barn, her children claim, "Mom makes the best homemade pot pie." Here is the recipe:

CHICKEN POT-PIE

2 cups cooked chicken with broth
1 can chicken broth
1 cup flour (sifted
¼ teaspoon baking powder
1 egg
Milk (enough to make soft dough)

Mix flour, egg, baking powder, and milk to make dough. Roll out dough on a well-floured board and cut in squares. Put chicken and broth in kettle with 1 cup water. Bring to a boil and slowly add pot pie squares. Add salt and pepper to taste and more water if necessary. Potatoes may be added.

"Farming is something we enjoy, so it doesn't seem so much like work," Bonnie said. "If our children don't continue farming, what will the future hold?"

Eliminate Mosquito Hotels On The Farm

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Spring cleaning this year on your farm should include finding and draining potential mosquito breeding sites. This year, reducing mosquito numbers is essential as West Nile Virus is anticipated in all parts of Ohio this summer.

"Look around your farm for places where rain water can stand for more than three days," said William Saville, an Ohio State University Extension veterinarian. "A good place to start looking is back of the barn where old tires, discarded watering tanks, and other unused equipment is kept."

Anything that could hold water, such as wheelbarrows and buckets, should be drained and turned over to prevent from filling with rainwater. Tires should be discarded to prevent water from collecting, said Saville, an assistant professor with the Department of Veterinary Preventive Medicine. Old tarps, feedbags, tin cans, bottles, or anything else lying around should be picked up and thrown away if necessary. Watering tanks should be emptied once a week and kept free of algae.

Mosquitoes breed in shallow water that stands for more than three days. Low areas in driveways, barnyards, and pastures should be drained or filled with dirt or gravel.

Saville reminds farm owners to also look for mosquito breeding areas around the house. Roof gutters need to be cleaned and tight covers should be kept over cisterns, septic tanks, and rain barrels. The water in birdbaths and wading pools should be drained once a week. If there is a farm pond, keep the banks mowed and free of vegetation. A stocked fishpond, which is well managed for weeds and algae, will help reduce mosquitoes.

Growing Up With Mother

GAY BROWNLEE
Virginia Co. Correspondent

HARRISONBURG, Va. — After my birth near Springs, Pennsylvania, I very quickly began to suck my thumb. Many babies do the same thing. The problem was even after I was in first grade at our elementary school, I was still sucking my thumb.

One day my worried mother said to my daddy, "Walter, what are we going to do to break Gay Nadine of sucking her thumb?"

He answered, "I don't know, Mother. What do you suggest?"

They took time to think about a solution.

As most mothers do, mine loved me very much. She wanted to protect me from behavior that would be unhealthy if it continued. For instance, what if thumb-sucking changed how my permanent teeth grew in?

With Daddy's agreement, my mother decided to try using black pepper to discourage my thumb-sucking. The pepper made me sneeze a lot, but it didn't solve the problem of thumb-sucking.

Then they applied something stronger. It, too, eventually wore off and I resumed sucking as usual.

Last of all came the oil of cloves application. At our house Mother kept oil of cloves in the medicine cabinet to treat toothaches.

Phewee! I gagged over the taste of my poor little thumb. I needed even more comfort after that episode.

Their failed efforts pretty well proved I was a hopeless case. Despite loving me with all their hearts my parents were discouraged.

When other people were around, I wasn't permitted to indulge the habit or there would be discipline, like a "time out," — except my parents didn't call it time out.

This is my mother and me when I was very young. We lived near Springs, Pennsylvania.

Instead, they said very firmly: "You sit there for the next 20 minutes!"

I whined. "But...."

"No, ifs, ands or buts!" my parents said.

I knew better than to keep arguing.

Finally, they started praying that God would help me stop. I think that's when things began to change because one day when I was 11, just like a bolt of lightening, the shame and embarrassment were clear to me.

All at once I couldn't imagine sucking my thumb anymore. So I stopped.

Amongst the other things my mother could make me do was wear my hair in pigtails. Talk about nerdy! That's what I thought pigtails were.

"Now hold still so I can plait your hair," was the order I heard each morning.

If my hair wasn't restrained then running and playing would send my long hair all over my face.

On Monday washdays I had to help wash the dirty laundry. First, the loads were sorted. Then into the white Maytag washing machine that was filled with hot water went the tablecloths, dish towels, and aprons to agitate.

The wringer that squeezed out the water looked like two rolling pins stuck together.

Outside, a pole that propped up the clothesline was stuck on end in the ground. Wet stuff weighed so much that if we forgot to put up the pole, the line sagged.

My mother taught me to iron clothes, wash and dry the dirty dishes, dust the furniture and shake the dirt off our everyday denim rugs constructed of recycled material from my daddys worn out work pants.

She made me take my bath and feed our dog, "Spot," his table scraps. Spot never knew store dog food existed.

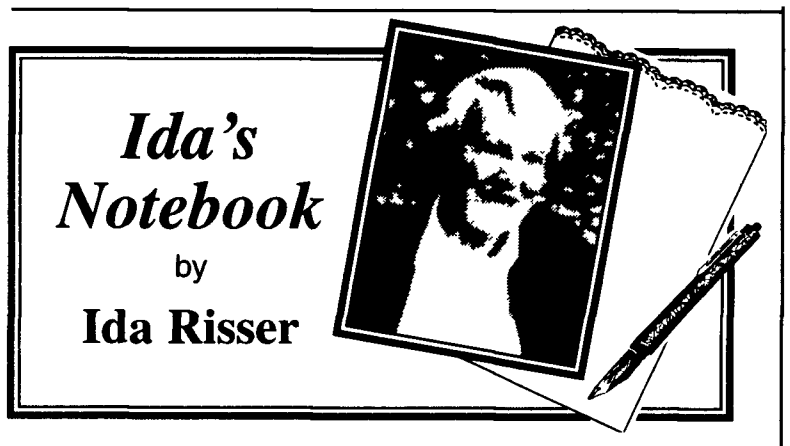
If I was mean to someone my mother insisted that I say: "I'm sorry," so the person I had hurt would feel better again and still like me.

One summer with friends, I went swimming in a big farm pond and something in the water caused a violent skin reaction that spread a hideous red rash over me. I recovered because my mother consulted with the doctor and did what he said.

Another time I awakened the following day after being stung by a bee and my eyes wouldn't open. No matter how I strained to pry them apart, my eyelids were too swollen to budge. Mother knew just what to do to reduce the swelling.

I loved my mother the best of anyone. That was true even when she tried to end the childish thumb-sucking habit.

My mother's unusual name was "Loveta" (lah veetah). She isn't alive today so I can't give her a gift for Mother's Day, but I still love her.



On a sunny Sunday, I finally took a walk in our woodland. Long ago it was a tradition to take my younger sisters for a walk to see how many wild flowers we could find. We walked along the edge of the Conestoga River and found Dutchman's Breeches, Virginia Bluebells, Spring Beauty, and lots of May Apples.

Last week I trimmed the dead branches off of our black raspberries. My husband had put in posts and wires to keep them upright and so they should be easy to pick. I'd like to sell some but my husband wants me to freeze all of them. He likes them on his cereal in the morning.

Lately, I've been attending too many funerals. Some are cousins and some are church members. I suppose we must accept that this happens as we get older. If one lives to a ripe old age, then there are almost no friends remaining to attend our funerals. My husband's aunts lived to be over 100 years old and so he has high hopes of being around for a while. Today, May 10, he is 85 years old.

Just now our son is traveling a lot. He just got back from Iowa and now is in North Carolina. That is no way to get the corn planted. But, he has hauled the manure and will soon cut the rye.

The other evening he started out for a pig sale in another county. Even though he took off from work early he got no pigs. The reason was that the traffic on a Friday night was so bad that it took twice as long as expected to get anywhere and so he came home empty-handed. The children need 4-H animals and he needs one to butcher and one for a pig roast that he holds in July for his friends.

Our family pet was a small dog named Spot. I am holding him by the collar.

Happy Mother's Day

It all started in ancient Greece when they had spring celebrations to honor Rhea, the mother of the Gods. Then during the 1600s, they honored mothers in England with Mothering Sunday.

Not until 1872 did Mother's Day come to the United States. Julie Ward Howe, who wrote the words to "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," wanted a day dedicated to peace.

In 1907, Ana Jarvis started the push to have a national Mother's Day. She had her mother's church celebrate Mother's Day on the second Sunday in May, the anniversary of her mother's death.

Jarvis and her friends wrote to ministers, business people and politicians, trying to have Mother's Day declared a national holiday. By 1911, almost every state celebrated Mother's Day. President Woodrow Wilson made it official in 1914.

Mother's Day is celebrated the second Sunday of May in the United States and in Denmark, Belgium, Australia, Turkey, Italy and Finland.

crusts in enough water to soften; drain and squeeze gently to remove excess water. Break bread into crumbs and measure 2 cups. Grease a 4-cup mold. Mix crumbs, raisins, molasses, and melted butter together. Combine baking soda and water and add to crumb mixture; mix well. Sift together flour, ginger, allspice, cinnamon, and salt; stir into crumb mixture. Pour mixture into greased pudding mold to keep out steam. Remember to leave some slack in foil because pudding will need room to expand. Place mold on rack in a steamer or large pot. Add boiling water to halfway up the sides of pudding mold. Cover and steam 2 hours or until firm to touch. Serve topped with molasses candy.

Pudding can be placed in a cloth bag instead of a mold. Place bag in pot with enough water to cover bag.

Water Molasses Candy:

1 cup molasses
¼ cup water
¼ cup butter
1 teaspoon vinegar

In a saucepan, combine all the ingredients. Heat until boiling, simmer, stirring occasionally, for 10 minutes. Serve over steamed or baked pudding.

A Lancaster County reader sent in this recipe for bag pudding.

Bag Pudding

1 egg, beaten
2 cups flour
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon vanilla
¾ cup brown sugar

Mix. Add enough milk to make a dough (not thin). Add ½ cup raisins that were cooked. This will make dough thinner. Mix well and put into a cloth bag tied shut at the top.

Put with dough into a kettle of boiling water and boil two hours. Don't use too small of a bag as dough rises. When done, open the bag and slide on a platter, cut and serve warm with milk. Leftovers are good cut into small pieces and topped with real cream, whipped. My mother used to make this and I thought of it again so made it on Saturday evening after seeing someone wants the recipe.

Here's another version for bag pudding sent in by Mary Jane Oberholtzer. She writes that her mother used to make it, and Mary Jane really liked it. It is a very old recipe. It is mixed before putting it into a bag.

Bag Pudding

1 pint flour
½ cup sugar
1 teaspoon baking soda
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup cooked raisins
Milk to make a soft dough

Combine ingredients and pour mixture into a bag, filling only half full. Cook one hour in kettle of boiling water.

ANSWER — An Ephrata reader requested granola bar recipes that taste like Sunbelt chewy honey and oats granola bars. Thanks to M. Martin, Lebanon, for sending a recipe that she writes is good.

Chewy Granola Bars

¾ cup brown sugar
⅔ cup peanut butter
½ cup honey
½ cup margarine, melted
2 teaspoons vanilla
3 cups quick oatmeal
½ cup coconut
½ cup sunflower nuts
½ cup raisins
⅓ cup wheat germ
2 tablespoons sesame seeds
1 cup chocolate chips

Mix first five ingredients until well blended. Stir in remaining ingredients. Press into greased 9x13-inch pan. Bake at 350 degrees for 15-20 minutes or until lightly browned. Cool completely. Cut into bars.

Eating Fruit Increases Weight Loss In Women

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Agriculture Secretary Dennis C Wolff announced the results of a Brazilian study that reported adding apples or pears to the diet may help women lose weight faster.

"As anyone who has struggled to lose weight knows, finding ways to shed pounds is often frustrating," Secretary Wolff said. "This study provides a tasty, yet healthy way to lose weight."

In a recent study, researchers at the State University of Rio de Janeiro found that overweight women who ate three small pears or apples per day lost more weight on a low-calorie diet than those who did not eat fruit. Researchers also found that those eating fruit consumed fewer calories and thus helped their weight loss efforts.

For 12 weeks, overweight women with high cholesterol ate a standardized, low-calorie diet. Participants either ate 300 grams of apple, 300 grams of pear, or 60 grams of oat cookie three times per day. Those that ate fruit lost more weight, consumed fewer calories, and had lower blood glucose levels than those consuming oat cookies.

The study also suggested that as "low energy-density" foods, fruits have a lower calorie count compared to other non-fruit foods. In addition, by eating foods high in fiber, people feel more satisfied and less likely to indulge in more snacks after a high-fiber meal. Apples and pears are excellent sources of dietary fiber, containing five grams and four grams of fiber respectively per each medium-sized fruit.

This study is good news for the thousands of women across the Commonwealth struggling to lose weight.

"We have always known that Pennsylvania's produce is 'Simply Delicious,' but now we know that our apples can help contribute to weight loss as well," said Secretary Wolff.

Awareness Day Teaches Savvy Shopping, Food Styling, Communicating, Scam Avoidance

LOU ANN GOOD
Food And Family
Features Editor

LEESPORT (Berks Co.) — More than 200 people attended the annual Spring Awareness Day April 29 at the Berks County Ag Center.

The annual event teaches consumers how to become more "shopping savvy" and deal effectively with pressing issues. This year the agenda was packed with information about shopping, food styling, communicating effectively with Alzheimer's Disease patients, and protecting oneself from telemarketing fraud. Some of the topics addressed included the following:

Shopping Savvy

Consumer Advocate Mary Bach is a watchdog on a variety of shopping issues. Intertwining facts and humor, Bach revealed numerous methods that chain stores and manufacturing companies employ to rip off consumers.

"Don't assume you will get the price advertised in the newspaper or on the shelf," Bach said. "Make sure the price you get is the price promised."

In some cases, five out of 15 items are scanned higher than advertised, she said. Scanner guarantee polices often state that if you are charged a higher price for the item than promised you get the item free.

"But you must ask for it," Bach said. "Make stores accountable. If you pocket something in the store, you will be charged with shoplifting, but if the store charges more for an item, they are 'shopper' lifting and should be held accountable," Bach said.

"Product downsizing is happening in every aisle of the store," Bach said. "It's legal but deceptive."

Certain brands of coffee have kept the same size can but gradually reduced the ounces from 16- to 11.

"Consumer speak runaround is another deceptive practice," Bach said. She shared how a standardized can of green beans was downsized from 16- to 14½-ounces. When she called the company to complain, she was told, "Actually you're getting more. The old can contained only two servings, but the new can has 3½ servings."

The difference was that the old can attributed one serving to be one cup. The new can reduces serving size from one cup to one-half cup.

"Tell the manufacture you are upset that they are tinkering with the product. It makes a difference if you are using a heirloom recipe that calls for one can of soup and so forth."

Bach's detective work in uncovering consumer fraud has been featured on "Dateline" TV and in many magazines and newspapers. She is the only consumer known to have sued Wal-Mart and won.

Scoop On Exotic Fruit

Bill Scepansky, Kegel's Produce corporate chef, said that technology, shipping and handling have made many specialty fruits and vegetables available year-round. Consumers may hesitate to use specialty items because they aren't sure how to use or prepare them.

Scepansky demonstrated using seven different items for food styling. Each of the more than 200 seminar participants got to sample the variety.

• Star fruit is picked green and turns a golden yellow as it ripens. Because it becomes juicy when ripe, star fruit is often used in the green stage. It is completely edible and makes a striking garnish. It can also be cooked similar to an apple.

• Prickly pear has a strong watermelon aroma and flavor. Pare off the barbs. It is a vibrant red inside. The seeds are edible but annoying to most people if not strained.

• Papaya starts green and ripens to gold. There are many different types. Peel, seed, and grate at the last minute to serve as a garnish on vanilla ice cream. Scoop out seeds, dice, and fan on plate for garnish.

• Mango can be tough to work with but worth it, Scepansky said. Peel and cut around its large seed. Slice paper thin or shave with grater to garnish cole slaw or shrimp. Refrigerates for 2-3 days. Mango has a strong, striking flavor that is common in Indian cuisine.

• Kiwi is most easily peeled by slipping a spoon beneath the thin skin and twisting. It is luscious and refreshing but cannot be used in gelatin dishes because of a strong enzyme that would counteract the gelatin. In addition to food garnishing, kiwi can be used to marinate meat.

• Blood oranges are dark red inside and supersweet. Make sure they are red outside before serving.

• Hickama peels like a potato, has a thin skin, and a texture like a potato but doesn't discolor. They are crisp and mild and go well with fruits.

• Avocado starts green but turns black when ripe. There are many varieties. Cut around the big pit, and twist in half. Whack knife into seed and it comes out. Put in water, the avocado will float.

Bill Scepansky, Kegel's Produce corporate chef, presents the scoop on exotic fruit.

• Quince is usually used in jellies and preserves. Place a roasting rack over and mixing bowl, press down, and the quince is ready to use.

Communicating With Alzheimer's Disease Patients

Claudia Strauss, author and adjunct professor at Albright College, believes body language and attitude is the secret ingredient needed to effectively communicate with Alzheimer's Disease patients.

Strauss said that many of the tips she gives in the book she has written on the subject may sound simple but are effective.

"Focus on them as the person they have always been. Expect to enjoy the visit, and they will sense it. Body language creates a feeling in the air. Even it you are only with an Alzheimer's patient for a few minutes, make a conscious effort to concentrate on the person. Slow down, speak slowly, and leave pauses for mental processing."

Alzheimer's patients often ask the same questions repetitively. Strauss recommends answering as if it were the first time they ask, but also change your physical position. Offer the patient food or water, which often causes the patient to perk up.

"Always protect the person's dignity," Strauss said. "Ask how lunch was, instead of what did you have?"

Strauss said it is important for caregivers to recognize the different stages of Alzheimer's in order to understand the patient.

Don't Be A Victim

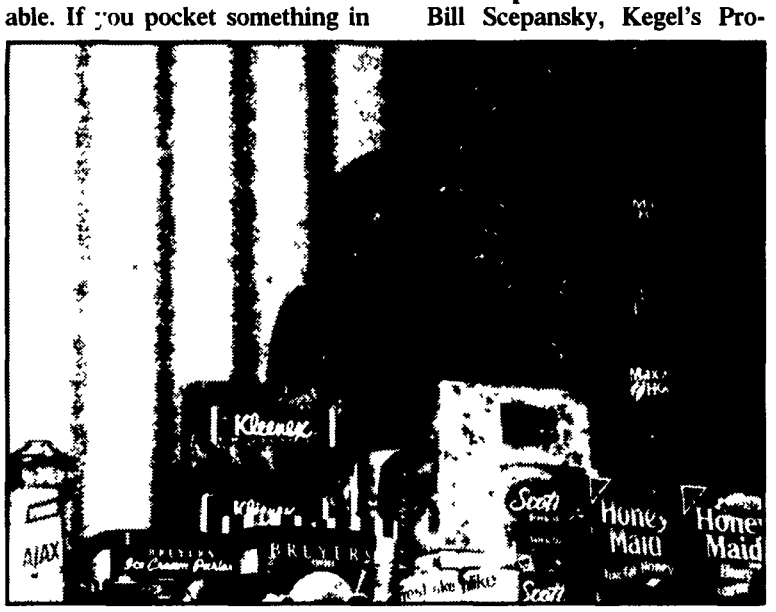
Trooper Raymond J. Albert of the Pennsylvania State Police said, "Don't fall for a telephone line — make sure money goes for a good cause, not into a con man's pocket."

Albert revealed many telemarketers strategies that defraud consumers. He advises only giving to local charities with which you are familiar.

Albert also warned against giving credit card numbers over the phone and how to protect oneself from identity theft.

To report telemarketing fraud, call the National Fraud Information Center at (800) 876-7060.

In other business, a $500 Berks County Extension Homemakers' Scholarship was presented to Kathryn Stanislaw, student at Indiana University of Pennsylvania. The scholarship is awarded annually to a student pursuing a consumer science or related degree.



Consumer Advocate Mary Bach reveals deceptive advertising tactics. Countering these tactics allow shoppers to make wise choices.

Family and Consumer Science Educator Fay Strickler, left, presents an award to Rita Lesher for her many years of service on the Family Living Advisory Committee.

Claudia Strauss, author and adjunct professor at Albright College, shares tips on how to communicate effectively with Alzheimer's Disease patients.

Through The Eyes Of A Child

If I could see the world through the eyes of a child what a wonderful world this would be. There would be no trouble and no strife, just a big happy life with a blue bird in every tree.

I could see right from wrong. I could see no bad. I could see all the good things in life I've never had.

If I could see the world through the eyes of a child what a wonderful world it would be.

If I could see the world through the eyes of a child, smiling faces would greet me all the while. Like a lovely work of art, it would warm my weary heart just to see through the eyes of a child.

Tattered, Torn Textiles Tell Significant Stories

LOU ANN GOOD
Food And Family Features Editor

STEVENS (Lancaster Co.) — Wendy Christie fingers the tattered edges of a 19th century feather bed cover.

While the untrained eye might dismiss the worn fabric as worthless, Wendy sees the richness of the weave and the value of its history. Stained and yellowed with age, the piece speaks volumes to Christie, an expert on Early American textiles.

"It's a legacy to the people to whose culture it belonged," she said. "Women without a voice spent their lifetimes serving their families. This is all that's left to communicate with us. When we value these pieces, it's like giving a voice to the women (who made them)."

Christie, who has appeared on several Martha Stewart television segments, lectures, operates an antiques shop near Adamstown, and who sets up at 12 shows annually, believes that her passion for textiles was inherited.

Her great grandparents immigrated from Scotland and were silk weavers. Her father's side of the family printed calico fabrics and specialized in Turkey red dyes. Her grandmother was a dressmaker and made business suits for women during the 1930s.

"I grew up loving plain woolen fabrics, admiring their textures and their richness," Christie said.

She learned smocking, basting, and other sewing skills from her grandmother. But best of all, when she sees fabric, she sees possibilities.

It's a talent, she said, she shares with most women who grew up in a working class, rural family — no matter what era.

"Give us a piece of fabric — and it offers so many possibilities."

Although fabric is used to make clothing, draperies, household uses, and much more, Christie disdains the idea that fabric must be used.

Why do we need to do anything with it? Why can't we just display it? she asks.

Display it is exactly what Christie does at her studio at 1035 N. Reading Rd., Stevens.

Rows of neatly folded fabric are interspersed with a collection of china and select antiques.

The fabrics show the variety of textures, the evolvement of fabric weave since the beginnings of America, — all in hues of white, black, and browns — her favorite colors.

When Christie started buying Pennsylvania homespun in the early 1990s, she found little information about it.

Her master degree's in studio fine arts and philosophy, which at first glance appear diverse, influenced her to find out as much as possible about early textiles. Her fine arts studies provided a background for appreciation of the textiles and the history entailed, and the philosophy caused her to examine her passion for it.

She asks, "What hung in the outhouse? What was used to wrap around a dead baby? How did handwoven tape differ from that used to tie featherbed cases to that used for garters? What did people like me do?

"I realized what I was looking at was the only voice and legacy that legions of rural American women left. That it was the only tangible thing to show that these women were even on the planet," Christie said.

Her research uncovered that 90 percent of the Early American textiles were not woven at home but were spun at home. The spun yarns were taken to a weaver and woven into utility goods for table linens and bedding. Women bartered back the finished fabric and made them into goods to provide for the family.

In Pennsylvania, cotton was readily available for spinning from the 1800s on. It was easier to spin than linen and flax, which is extremely labor intensive.

German styles usually covered straw mattresses with tow, which incorporated short pieces of flax into the linen, giving it a nubby, rustic appearance. Bleach tow refers to utility grade fabric. A linen sheet to sleep on could either have been of a fine or coarse weave. Feather bolsters resulted in the person sleeping in an almost upright position.

In addition to buying and selling, Christie also completes consignment projects such as outfitting antique beds. She will not cut into antique pieces, and discourages others from using them every day because "they are not a renewable source." However she will hand-stitch pieces of fabric that can be used without damage by cutting. Her forte is making feather bed covers topped with pillows by layering with vintage scraps.

Christie offers a few pointers

(Turn to Page B26)

In her studio, Wendy Christie is surrounded by things she loves: 19th century rural American cloth, china, and select antiques.

"It's addictive," Wendy Christie said of collecting 19th century rural American cloth. "Each piece is better than the other."

Coverings for this late 19th century bed were hand sewn by Christie using scraps of textiles. She refuses to "damage" pieces by cutting because the Early American textiles are not a renewable source.

The display of blacks, browns, and whites makes a striking visual statement in Christie's shop.

Good design transcends time, Christie said of the Early American textiles. Many of the fabrics were used every day and were not meant to be fanciful or even to be displayed.

THE ANTIQUE DETECTIVE

Anne Gilbert

Many Types, Makers Of Cameo Glass

Many names come to mind when "cameo glass" is mentioned. Among them the Englishman John Northwood, French makers Emile Galle' and Auguste and Antonin Daum In America Gillinder and Sons, Bakewell, Mt. Washington and Northwood made their versions.

The first examples of cameo glass were recorded in ancient Rome.

The only remaining example is the "Portland Vase" with its neoclassic figure subject. It is displayed in the British Museum. The technique was all but forgotten until the Chinese began experimenting, combining wheel-cutting and engraving on opaque glass.

Today it is known as Peking glass. This overlay or cased glass, in two or more colors was in general use in China by the early 18th century. But not until it was made in Europe in the mid-19th century, did it become known as Art Glass. The leading makers were in France, England and America. However fine examples were also being made in the various glass making cities of Italy, Venice and Murano, among them. A version was also made in Bohemia.

Basically the process involves taking two or more glass blank layers, blown and fused together. Next, the piece was placed in a hydrofluroic acid solution that removed the shine. Then, the glass was painted with a design and dipped once more into acid. The acid ate away the background, leaving the varnished section. The remaining design was was wheel-engraved or cut. The quality depended on the talents of the craftsman.

CLUES: In England John Northwood is one of the most important artisan.

After many years of experimenting, he produced his first piece of Cameo Glass in 1860, using a neo-classical subject. His most well-known piece was the first replica of the Portland vase.

It took him three years to carve it. His final work, done in 1882, the Pegasus vase, is considered his finest. Price-wise it went up and down over the years, before ending up in the National Collection of Fine Arts, Smithsonian Institution, in 1929.

For the most part English Cameo Glass can be recognized by the "Wedgwood" type, neoclassical subjects.

Totally different was the American Cameo Glass of the 1880s. It was the result of a new technique making transfer-printed designs with acid-resisting inks.

These were then applied to the glass surface before it was bathed in the etching fluids.

The result was a small, raised cameo design. For the most part the designs were florals and foliage. By 1880 Gillinder and Sons were making a few pieces. William L. Libbey of the New England Glass Company developed a process using pressed and blown glass to create a cameo effect.

What is considered the finest Cameo Glass was made in France during the Art Nouveau Period (1880s-1914). Using the then popular Oriental motifs, French glass artisans often combined pieces with colored enamels and metallic oxides.

Examples by Emile Galle' and the Daum brothers can sell at auction for five figures.

Of course, lesser pieces have sold for $500 or under a thousand dollars.

Reproductions have been made since the 1970s of Daum. Inferior pieces can have faked signatures. Although there are many other French Cameo Glass makers who worked at the same time, such as Leverre, De Vez and D'Argental, they sell for a fraction of the recognized "masters." Don't overpay for a piece just because it is cameo glass.

The French always signed their pieces, unlike the English and Americans.

Tattered, Torn Textiles

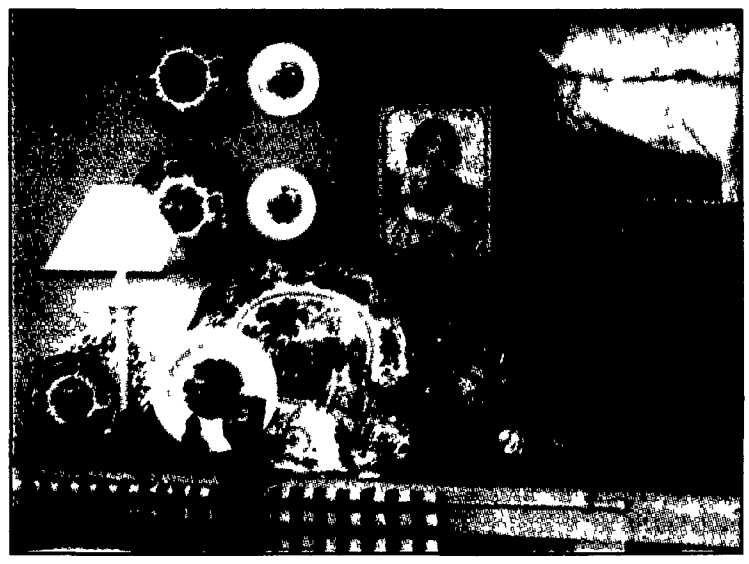
to identifying textiles. "If it is red linen, it probably is not American and definitely not Pennsylvania German," she said. "By the time we could dye red linen successfully, we had cotton."

Pennsylvania professional blue dyers were scattered around Pennsylvania. Rather than dye yarns at home, most housewives took the fabric to professional dyers. Linen left in its natural state, bleached, or dyed blue, brown, or a combination were most common. Table linens were always white and showed off the best skills of spinners and weavers.

Contrary to myth, there were no itinerant weavers because it was too clumsy to haul a loom from town to town, Christie said.



Coordinating colors of china accent textile displays.

More common were farmers who took in a weaver during the months when they weren't as busy with farming the land and butchering.

Weavers could not exist without spinners, whose skill dictated the quality of the finished cloth.

Christie is writing a book on homespun and millwork and continues to buy and sell. She prefers fabrics in original condition even if stained. "Don't clean them if you are lucky enough to have some old textiles," she said. "Note what you know about the fabric by writing it on cotton and attaching it to the old fabric by hand stitching."

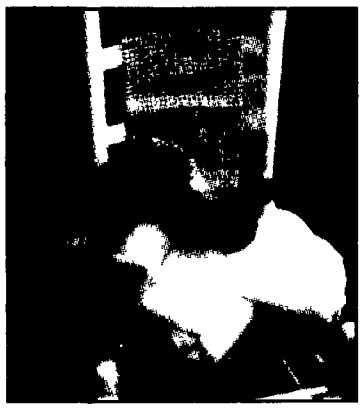
Christie has acquired some pieces with attached information that is so scant it only raises more questions. One had "bought at grandpa's sale."

Christie asks, "Grandpa who? When? Where?"

On the other hand, Christie said, "If you don't know for certain, don't label pieces. Some people deliberately deceive collectors by offering false information."

In addition to buying, selling, and consignment work, Christie will do appraisals and fiber identification.

In addition to her studio, Christie has a blue and white textile display at Adams Antiques across from Renninger's Antiques. Because she travels a great deal, hours at Christie's studio, 1035 N. Reading Rd., Stevens, are by appointment or chance. Call (717) 336-0998.



Notice the differences in texture among these fabrics woven between 1800-1850. Displayed from the bottom are a tow homespun mattress cover, a patterned weave homespun tablecloth, a tow grain bag, finely spun linen yarn, a balance checkered bed case dyed from onion skins, and a table linen fragment made into a kitchen towel.

InfoAg 2003 Conference Set For July

NORCROSS, Ga. — Certified Crop Advisers (CCAs), field agronomists, extension representatives, innovative farmers, and other precision agriculture enthusiasts are encouraged to mark their calendars for the sixth Information Agriculture Conference, InfoAg 2003, scheduled for July 30 through August 1, at the Adam's Mark Hotel, Indianapolis Airport.

An optional precision agriculture field day is planned for Monday, July 29, preceding the conference, with visits to the Ag One Co-op facility at Wilkinson, Indiana, and the Davis-Purdue Agricultural Center.

Keynote speaker for InfoAg will be Bruce Vincent, agriculture advocate known for developing positive programs and messages directed to community groups. Program content for InfoAg 2003 will be oriented to practical, real-world application of technology and analysis of data essential in site-specific farming. As in the past, an exhibit area will feature the latest in data collection and management, communications technology, and other tools for precision agriculture.

InfoAg 2003 is organized by the Potash & Phosphate Institute (PPI), Foundation for Agronomic Research (FAR), and CropLife Media Group (CropLife and CyberDealer magazines). The conference is supported in part by a grant from the USDA-CSREES Initiative for Future Agriculture and Food Systems (IFAFS) program.

More details about program plans, registration and exhibitor fees, and related information will be available at the Website: www.ppi-far.org/infoag.

Miller Pro® Forage Boxes Speed Harvest

ST. NAZIANZ, Wis. — Today's forage harvesting practices require bigger forage boxes and faster ways of getting the job done.

Miller Pro's new, long line of 5300 series forage boxes is designed for greater capacity and speed. For example, in addition to traditional forage boxes, every model is available as a receiver box for both truck and trailer mount. They can be side loaded with Miller Pro high lift dump boxes, or can run behind or along side self-propelled forage harvesters.

To increase load capacity, receiver boxes are available with side extensions and a 4th beater. Mounted on a tandem axle trailer, receiver boxes provide an ideal system for filling bags and upright or bunker silos. The smoother ride, better trailing, and maneuverability typically allow the operator to travel one or two gears faster in field conditions than with a conventional steerable wagon. In addition, PTO drive lines can remain attached to the tractor. That means you can start the PTO before leaving the tractor, saving two trips in and out of the tractor, hooking and unhooking the PTO.

Miller Pro offers all configurations in its forage box line including front unload, rear unload, and combination front/rear models, all with or without a roof. Front unload models have a new, operator friendly, optional 18 in. (30 in. overall) fold down cross conveyor extension making it very easy to approach the blower, especially with today's larger tractors.

Dairyland Seed Introduces Branched-Rooted Hybrid Alfalfa

WEST BEND, Wis. — The world's first hybrid alfalfa now has a companion. Dairyland Seed has announced the release of HybriForce™-420/Wet, a hybrid alfalfa that carries the unique branched-rooted trait.

HybriForce-420/Wet has the same branched-root trait of Dairyland Seed's popular Magnum V-Wet alfalfa, with the additional hybrid benefit of increased vigor and more resilient plants. HybriForce-420/Wet is designed for poorly drained soils or fields subject to heaving.

The secret behind HybriForce-420/Wet is the plant's ability to adjust to moisture stresses. Plant roots branch out, staying above the water level, and make HybriForce-420/Wet an excellent choice for producers with low-lying or poorly drained soils.

"Further advances with our patented msSUNSTRA hybrid alfalfa technology have helped our researchers develop this next new hybrid alfalfa product," said Tom Strachota, chief executive officer of Dairyland Seed. "This new technology will continue to bring hybrid alfalfa products with specific traits and growing characteristics."

Dairyland Seed researchers have taken the key characteristics of Magnum V-Wet alfalfa and incorporated those branched-root traits into HybriForce-420/Wet. "Hybrid alfalfa technology along with a prolific branched-root system will allow HybriForce-420/Wet to persist and be productive in both wet and well-drained soils," said Mike Velde, alfalfa plant breeder at Dairyland Seed.

Dairyland Seed's HybriForce-420/Wet hybrid alfalfa will be marketed this year in limited quantities. It joins a growing list of seed innovations in alfalfa from Dairyland Seed.

DITCHBANK MOWER

DB150. Over 30 years of hydraulic mower design experience has made the Rhino® DB150 the preferred choice of experienced operators for the mowing of pond banks levees drainage ditches and hard-to-reach areas

The DB150 can extend to a maximum of 158 from the center line of the tractor allowing the 60 inch rotary head to cut areas that are difficult or impossible to reach with ordinary mowers By being hydraulically driven maintenance is greatly reduced with the absence of belts and pulleys The DB150 outperforms many competitive units with smaller hydraulic systems The DB150 utilizes a 60 gallon hydraulic system which allows the unit to run cooler in tough mowing conditions The large reservoir also serves as a counterweight and remains stationary on the mainframe, eliminating the potential traffic hazard of a movable counter-balance weight The DB150 features a heavy-duty three-point hitch using a lower double lug hitch system to fit a wide range of tractors To help insure a clean cut, the DB150 features updraft blades and a blade tip speed of 20,028 FPM

NOW IS A GREAT TIME TO TRIM BACK THOSE FENCE LINES WITH A RHINO BOOM MOWER

The Servis® 1548 hydraulic boom flail cutters are designed for mowing grass and cutting brush in hard-to-reach areas including roadsides, ditchbanks, ponds, and fence rows Large model with up to 15 foot horizontal reach and up to 4" diameter brush cutting

SE8
In Stock

The Rhino® SE8 is an economical rotary mower designed to help maintain larger acreages of grass, weeds, stalks, or material up to 1" in diameter.

The streamlined, close-coupled design allows economical operation on tractors as small as 30 horsepower on the SE8 The 85 HP center gearbox and 60 HP outboard gearboxes are protected from sudden shockloads by a slip clutch on the main driveline and torque dampeners on the side driveshafts Pan blade carriers help the unit glide over field obstacles and updraft blades with a 4" blade overlap provide a clean cut

GEHL 4x5 WET HAY BALER MODEL RB 2580 ROUND BALERS

Featuring the ALL-NEW Variable Open-Throat Power In-Feed System

GREAT BALING STARTS HERE

Variable Open-Throat Power In-Feed System Here's how it works The incoming crop is pulled off the pickup by the aggressive action of two power in-feed rolls – a 6-inch-diameter pivoting power in-feed roll on top and and 8-inch diameter fixed power in-feed roll on the bottom

The top pivoting power in-feed roll rides over the crop as it is pulled into the bale chamber An extension spring keeps the toproll under constant downward force

The spring tension increases as the variable throat opens from a minimum of 3/4 of an inch up to a maximum opening of nearly 7 inches The constant downward force of the pivoting upper powered in-feed roll, in combination with the fixed lower in-feed roll, both turning inward, pinches the crop and forces it into the bale chamber. The stripping roll strips crop off the belt and forces it down to the incoming crop Adjustable scrapers on the stripping roll and pivoting roll eliminate buildup One Only

Are You Suffering From Separation Anxiety?

Put Your Mind At Ease With An Axial-Flow Combine From Hoober

A Case-IH Rotary Axial-Flow Combine has only ONE moving part in it's entire threshing/separating process . . . a single large-diameter rotor. Open up the side shield on any other rotary combine and compare it to the drive mechanism, and you will see that the Case-IH rotary combine has fewer moving parts, which means fewer problems and easier adjustments. Plus all Hoober combines are backed by our experienced combine service technicians.

TK crawlers work where conventional tractors can't

Minimum slip

Since tracks keep slippage to a minimum, they boost performance The tractor is capable of pulling its own weight As a result, it can pull and drive wider implements than a conventional rubber tired tractor of the same horsepower That increases efficiency and lowers operating costs

A TK crawler turns tighter than conventional tractors, too That's a big advantage in cramped quarters or when making headland turns

For extended road transportation, TK tracks can be fitted easily with clip-on steel pads or "street plates "

Simple, accurate, zero maintenance.

Every White Planter is engineered from the ground up to provide outstanding quality, simplicity, accuracy, gentle handling and visibility of the seed. So, when you purchase a White Planter, if you're required to replace parts in the metering system within the first three years, we'll simply give you the parts at no charge. That's belief in a product and a claim the competition won't make. This represents all of the features a successful farmer demands from a new planter . . . ensuring perfect seed placement across the field.

Portable Tractor Saw

Cut cordwood, pulpwood, firewood, ties or any other type of wood anywhere. Hook it up to your 3 point hitch, attach the PTO and move the Woodsman Saw to any location. As soon as you place a log on the sturdy 40" table, you'll get the feel of balanced-torque action. A light hand pressure moves the log into the blade, release the pressure and the spring loaded table rocks back on dual roller bearings, ready for the next cut. Built on a rugged steel frame, the Model 250 is engineered for years of heavy duty use.

Model 250 Specifications

Tractor hitch linkage	3-point hitch
Saw blade	30" diameter
Table	40" x 10 1/2", mounted on dual roller bearings

Shaft	Mounted on sealed, self-aligning ball bearings
Overall dimensions	38" x 44" x 44"

New DuraBull™ Rake Wheels Improves Performance; Reduce Maintenance

PELLA, Iowa — A new, 'DuraBull' rake wheel design (patent pending) is sweeping up plenty of hay and lots of interest recently, as a result of several in-field reports on significant improvements in wheel rake performance, reliability and reduced maintenance, according to officials at Vermeer.

"This new DuraBull rake wheel design is, indeed, a major improvement. The new rugged, heavy-gauge, camber-style twin raking teeth are much stronger and last longer than today's single-tooth designs," said Jay Van Roekel, Vermeer sales and marketing manager. "Plus, they run cleaner and more consistently, even on rough surfaces and in heavier crops," Van Roekel said.

According to Vermeer claims, the unique double-tooth DuraBull rake wheel configuration significantly reduces the sharp bends that are required and designed into single tooth setups; and thereby reduces the wear, stress, and potential for bending or breakage at the wheel's weakest point. As a result, it lowers replacement costs and hassles. Replacement, when needed, is quick and easy, simply by removing a single bolt that locks in each double-tooth arrangement.

An extended outer rim design (positioned closer to the outside tip of the tines) increases overall strength and performance; and yet, it still allows the camber tooth to flex and torque, as necessary, to prevent breakage and avoid getting entangled with adjacent rake wheels. In addition, the same wheel can be mounted on either left or right hand side of the rake.

The new DuraBull Rake Wheels are designed to mount on many brands and models of wheel rakes, produced worldwide. And, according to one Vermeer Hay Specialist spokesman, the new rake wheel design will be featured on all new WRX Wheel Rakes in 2003. Optional wind discs are also available to help reduce the effects of wind while raking.

2003 Could Be New Year For GM Corn Mix

BROOKINGS, S.D. — A new, genetically modified (GM) corn, if approved in time for Spring 2003 planting, should make that season the biggest yet for GM corn. In 2001, U.S. farmers grew GM corn on about a quarter of the land planted to corn.

The new corn, Monsanto's YieldGard Rootworm corn, produces its own Bt (Bacillus thuringiensis), a natural bacterial insecticide, to kill corn rootworms. The corn rootworm triggers more insecticide use than any other single pest in U.S. agriculture.

To address concerns about corn rootworms' developing resistance to the plant-produced insecticide, Wade French, an Agricultural Research Service entomologist at Brookings, S.D., and colleagues are working with Monsanto to develop the concept of mixing conventional and GM corn seeds. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency is reviewing Monsanto's application for approval to sell the GM seed. Based on continuing research, the EPA, ARS and Monsanto would determine whether seed sold in a mixture may be a viable commercial alternative the company could eventually consider.

In a five-year cooperative research and development agreement that was renewed recently, the researchers have found the seed mix offered superior corn rootworm control to that of a conventional insecticide and may slow down the development of resistance to Bt.

Plants growing from the conventional seeds in the mix would serve as a refuge, to ensure there are some rootworm beetles not exposed to Bt available to mate with those that are.

This new GM corn has become more important since the corn rootworm has, in the past few years, become the first pest ever to evolve a way of foiling crop rotations. The rootworms either rotate the fields they lay eggs in or extend their egg-hatching time to match crop rotations.

Tractor Design Competition Showcases Student Engineering Talent

ST. JOSEPH, Mich. — The 2003 ASAE International ¼-Scale Tractor Student Design Competition will take place May 29-June 1, at the Quad City Downs in East Moline, Illinois.

The popular competition, now entering its sixth year, boasts an impressive field of university teams from the U.S., Canada and — making its first appearance in the contest — University College - Dublin.

The ¼-Scale Tractor contest gives participants a 360-degree engineering experience. Students must not only take a high-tech product from concept to manufacture, they must also address marketing, production, and risk considerations throughout the process. Teams spend most of an academic year designing, building, and testing their machines. No materials or funds are supplied to the participants except for a stock 16-horsepower Briggs & Stratton Vanguard engine and a set of Firestone tires.

Teams compete in four judged areas: written design report, team presentation (given at Deere & Co. world headquarters), static design judging, and a multi-stage tractor pull.

"In the end, participants gain an appreciation of the expectations and challenges they will encounter once they join the workforce," said Neil Detra, Case Corp engineer and co-founder of the event. "Not only do they acquire engineering experience, they also polish the non-technical skills employers value, such as teamwork, leadership, and time management."

A detailed schedule of events, a complete list of regulations, and other information can be found at www/asae/org/students/tractor/asaecomp.html. Interested persons can also contact Dolores Landeck, ASAE, 2950 Niles Rd., St. Joseph, MI 49085-9659; (269) 428-6339; e-mail landeck@asae.org.

The ¼-Scale Tractor Design Competition is made possible by AGCO, Briggs & Stratton, Case, Caterpillar, Cub Cadet, Deere & Co., and New Holland. Additional support is provided by Bridgestone/Firestone, Campbell ScientificClaas, The Grasshopper Company, Milwaukee Electric Tool Corp., Midwest Super Cub, and Snap-On.

Herbicide Offers Grass Control, Residual Broadleaf Control

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. — Equip™ corn herbicide — the most recent addition to the Bayer CropScience corn herbicide portfolio — received U.S. Enrivonmental Protection Agency (EPA) approval in time for use during the 2003 growing season.

Equip is a broad-spectrum herbicide that controls grasses such as foxtails, johnsongrass, and shattercane. It also delivers control of broadleaf weeds such as cocklebur, lambsquarters, morningglory, ragweed, sunflower, and velvetleaf.

Greg Perrigo, Equip marketing manager, said, "Equip is a herbicide that provides the most complete weed control of any conventional, postemergence herbicide for corn, resulting in cleaner fields with less effort."

One of the active ingredients of Equip is foramsulfuron — the same active ingredient found in Option® corn herbicide. But Perrigo explained that Equip also contains iodosulfuron, a new proprietary herbicide for broadleaf control that also offers targeted residual for continued control of small-seeded broadleaves such as lambsquarters, pigweed, and smartweed.

The preferred adjuvant system for Equip is MSO + UAN (28-32 percent) or AMS. The Equip formulation also contains a unique safener that allows tankmixing opportunities not often found with other herbicides. For example, applicators may choose to tankmix Equip with another herbicide for more residual grass control. The safener allows tankmixing Equip, MSO + nitrogen and herbicides such as Marksman. Growers and applicators should refer to the product label for a complete listing of tankmix partners.

New Case IH Split-Row Planter Boosts Productivity

RACINE, Wis. — Case IH will further extend its 1200 Series Advanced Seed Meter (ASM) planter line up with new 12/23- and 16/31-split-row configurations. Large acreage farmers who rotate between 30- and 15-in rows need to look no further when it comes to boosting productivity and accuracy.

"Our newest 1200 Series split-row planters are perfect for corn and soybean farmers who are interested in planting more acres per day," says Alan Forbes, marketing manager for Case IH planters. "Study after study shows that missing the optimum planting window by even a couple of days can mean significant yield penalties, and our proven meter and row unit designs can help farmers meet that deadline."

The 1200 Series split-row planter takes the Case IH leadership position with central-fill seed systems a step further. Hopper size has been increased. Twin 40-bushel tanks now provide a constant flow of seed to each row unit.

"Dating back to the first Cyclo planter introduction, Case IH has a long standing tradition of using central fill seed hoppers. Case IH customers have always been able to stay in the field longer and get more done with fewer, shorter stops to refill the planter," Forbes says.

New Case IH 1200 Series planter can line-up with 12/23- and 16/31-split row configurations.

The slow-turning ASM-design uses the largest diameter seed disc (11.8 inches) with the most holes (48 for corn) in the industry. The large number of holes allows the seed disc to turn slower, even at higher field speeds, for more controlled seed release and better accuracy.

Skips and doubles are kept to a minimum thanks to the patented ASM three-spool seed singulation design. Seed size selection is also simplified. One seed disc and one vacuum setting are recommended for all sizes and shapes of corn seed. Vacuum tweaks and meter calibrations are now a thing of the past.

"The ASM has no favorite seed size," Forbes notes. "Flat or round, large or small, the ASM plants them all with the same accuracy, and no adjustments are required when changing between seed sizes."

Getting the 1200 Series planter to the field has never been easier. Case IH split-row planters use the same rotating toolbar design introduced on 12- and 16-row planters. With the touch of a button the planter will go from field position to a narrow transport position measuring just 12-feet 7-inches wide.

AGCO Introduces New Idea 5515 Disc Mower Conditioner

ATLANTA, Ga. — Highly productive haymaking requires highly productive equipment and the New Idea 5515 mower conditioner fits the bill perfectly. The 15-foot, 3-inch wide cutting bed and center pivot hitch is designed to efficiently handle big fields, whether crops are heavy or light. From the swivel hitch to sealed bearings and gears, the 5515 is built for less wear, less maintenance, smoother operation, and longer life.

"When it's time to make hay, there is no time for breakdowns or slow downs," said Bill Gearhart, New Idea Sales Engineer, AGCO. "New Idea has built its reputation on durability, and the 5515 is no exception. It is designed to keep moving smoothly, hour after hour and season after season. Operators will find less down time and fewer field delays, thanks to shaved wide profile gears, sealed and pre-lubed bearings, and advanced cutter bed and conditioner designs."

Productive mowing and conditioning with the cutter bed. The New Idea 5515 Disc Mower Conditioner features a 15-foot, 3-inch cutter bed with 20 swingaway, reversible knives mounted on ten discs. The superior, spur gear cutter bed design features pre-lubed and sealed bearings for both idler and drive gears. The sealed systems keep bearings lubricated and free from contamination.

New Idea 5515 Disc Mower Conditioner

"With the over-center cam system, the 5515 will handle potential plugs without the operator even noticing," said Gearhart, "It's just one more way the 5515 is built to keep going when other mower conditioners would have to slow down or stop."

Other advanced design features include an enclosed conditioner roll drive gear case, multiple spring flotation and a swivel hitch, all standard on the 5515. Like the sealed bearings, the enclosed gear case ensures constant lubrication and extended life.

Gehl Adds Windrow Merger To Line

WEST BEND, Wis. — Gehl Company has announced the addition of the 2109 Windrow Merger to its hay tool and forage harvesting product lines.

The 2109 Windrow Merger can maximize production capacity by combining windrows in the field, making each pass with a forage harvester or baler more productive. It also reduces fuel costs, man-hours, and wear and tear on equipment.

The 2109 Windrow Merger is designed with a proven nine-foot pickup that lifts crop with a gentle sweeping motion onto the wide belt conveyor. The pickup-drive is hydraulically driven and has a variable-speed flow control, allowing the operator to match pickup speed to ground speed and crop conditions. Material is distributed smoothly and evenly without bunching. The cross conveyor can be tailored to the user's mower conditioner or crop conditions, and moved a total of 24 inches left or right.

"The 2109 Windrow Merger is another example of a Gehl product that will help our customers increase their productivity and save money," said Andy Strupp, agricultural product manager. "Farmers today are looking for ways to reduce the number of times they go across their fields with their large and more expensive equipment."

Agribusinesses Can Tap Penn State Web Resource

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — Agribusinesses and others with a stake in the food and fiber system have a new place to turn for current information on issues affecting the industry, new research, professional development opportunities and other topics.

"Partners in Progress," which can be found at http://collegerelations.cas.psu.edu, is a Website developed by Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences to provide informational and educational resources for the diverse agribusiness community in Pennsylvania and beyond.

"The site was designed specifically with our business and industry colleagues in mind," said Mary Wirth, director of college relations.

"It contains links to pertinent college information and programs and organizes them in a user-friendly format."

Visitors to the site will find links to technical information and programs, fee-based services, research, continuing and extension education, publications, events, international programs and other offerings.

"Information on biosecurity, drought, food safety, pesticides and other important topics are just a click away," Wirth said. "Several of the resources found on the site, such as AgMap, offer businesses the opportunity to list their goods and services in searchable databases, linking supply with demand."

For more information on College of Agricultural Sciences programs for business and industry, contact Mary Wirth by phone at (814) 863-9646 or by e-mail at mfw10@psu.edu.

McCormick Introduces GX And GXH Series Compact Tractors

PELLA, Iowa — McCormick International USA, Inc. has introduced the GX/GXH series tractors (38-hp to 50-hp), the ultimate compact tractor for landscaping, grounds care, and acreage owners. The GX and GXH are powered by a Yanmar three- or four-cylinder diesel engine. Buyers can select a 38-hp, 44-hp, or 50-hp engine to meet their specific power needs.

"These are highly maneuverable, versatile little tractors that are ideal for commercial users as well as private acreage owners with large grounds to maintain," said Chad Huyser, marketing manager of McCormick. "And with a choice of transmissions and two- or four-wheel drive, end users can have the perfect package for their needs."

The GX series tractors have a robust 12-forward, 12-reverse speed gearbox with synchromesh shuttle. An optional creep gearbox adds four lower gears for a very slow speed in both directions. Gear levers are easy to reach and positioned out of the way to the right of the driver, while the forward-reverse shuttle lever is conveniently placed to the left of the steering wheel.

The GXH series offer hydrostatic drive, giving versatile and adjustable speed control using separate forward and reverse pedals. With three hydrostatic working ranges, this transmission provides ideal operating speeds for different tasks.

The GXH also has cruise control to fix the forward speed for long mowing runs to help reduce driver fatigue.

With power takeoff points at the front, middle, and rear of the tractor (1000-, 1000-, and 540-rpm, respectively), McCormick's GX/GXH series tractors offer the ultimate in implement operating versatility.

"These tractors have a rear power take-off system that produces 540-rpm at one of two engine speeds — one for power, one for greater fuel economy and lower noise," says Huyser. "There is also a ground-speed power take-off that changes the shaft speed in line with changes in ground speed so that spreaders and similar implements maintain the same application rate on uneven terrain."

What's against soft paint?

In metal roofing and siding some manufacturers use soft pliable paint to prevent cracks. The disadvantage with softer paint is that it scratches so easy. Handling during erection, flying debris during storms, children playing against it, etc. can easily scratch softer paint. Scratches on softer paints tend to rust prematurely. Everlast heat forms to prevent this. Ask our competition if they heat form. It's important.

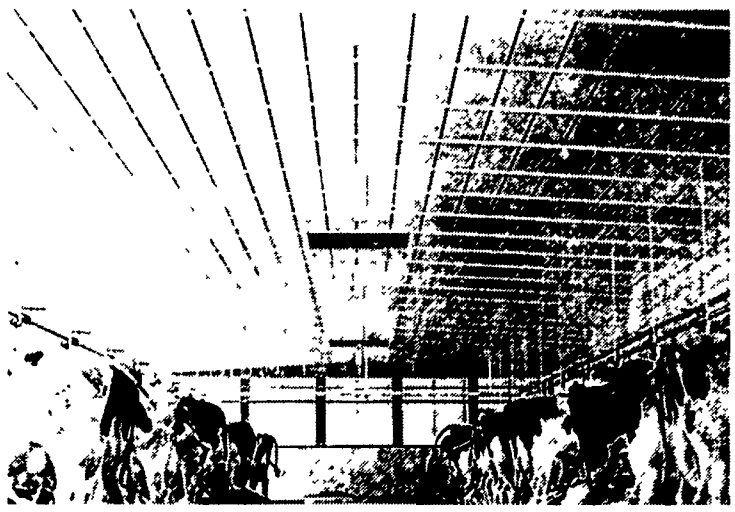
– Ceiling systems designed for your dairy, swine, and poultry facilities, as well – as shops, warehouses, garages, arenas, and more.

Tired of working in a cold, noisy shop?
These ceiling systems are designed to hold any amount of insulation, and with insulation above, produce sound reduction qualities much greater than steel.

Is the banding in your hog or poultry barn deteriorating?
Let us replace them with our heavier polyester bands which do not stretch or become brittle over time.



Are you frustrated with the birds in your implement shed?
Get the problem under control with a triply ceiling, as well as greatly improving the lighting.

Contemplating a drop ceiling?
Demand a triply ceiling above your drop ceiling if there is insulation being installed. This will serve as a vapor barrier along with permanently preventing falling insulation.

Providing the Ag industry with a very durable, attractive, waterproof, noncorrosive, alternative to conventional ceilings at a fraction of the cost.
From 20¢/Sq. Ft. Installed

Imported from Holland, ORLANDO is a black 17.1 Hand Dutch Harness Horse Stallion.

The Dutch Harness Horse is a wonderful horse to cross with existing breeds of horses used for driving and work. Dutch Harness Horses have been bred in Holland for over 80 years. The sole purpose is to increase trot and stride, thus producing driving horses that move more efficiently and cover more ground with less effort.

Exciting opportunities exist for the serious breeder looking to be involved with the induction and infusion of these great horses into today's breeding programs.

ORLANDO is standing at Mogadore, Ohio for the 2003 breeding season, shipped semen is available. The 2003 introductory stud fee is $1000.00 and includes a live foal guarantee

Local Farmers Feed World-Class Horses At Hanover Shoe Farms

HANOVER (Adams Co.) — Traveling on roads south and west of Hanover, you can't miss the horse pastures — about 3,000 acres worth, enclosed by some 240 miles of board fence.

Four hundred standardbred broodmares, hundreds of young horses, and a number of stud stallions have their home here.

Feeding and bedding the horses takes 1,150 tons of hay and 1,200 tons of straw a year, all of which is purchased from local farms. The horses also consume about 47,000 bushels of oats and 750 tons of performance feed per year.

Hanover Shoe Farms deals with 80 local businesses, feeds hay from 25 local farms, and employs about 100 people. That adds up to a huge impact on the local economy, not to mention the preservation of agricultural land in the area.

According to Ed Sponseller, operations and maintenance supervisor, keeping a close relationship with the local ag and business community is a

BELLEFONTE (Centre Co.) — The petite blonde foals frolicking around the pasture may look like small Belgians, but as these babies grow to full stature, they reveal that they are a different breed altogether.

Although they are fairly new arrivals to the U.S., the honey-colored Haflinger ponies are already sought after for their quiet temperament and versatility.

The amicable breed is marked by athleticism and a congenial disposition, however they are perhaps most recognizable for their unique color-high priority at Hanover Shoe Farms. A big part of Sponseller's job is dealing with local suppliers and service companies.

"All the farmers in this area know me," he said. "It's a trust relationship. I'm a firm believer in buying everything local."

Contrary to what some people might think, the horses on Hanover Shoe Farms don't go for shoe leather. They are harness racers, and the herd includes some of the top standardbred stock in the world.

Originally founded as an advertising vehicle for the Hanover Shoe Company, the farm was transformed in the 1920s when a young man named Lawrence Sheppard began to buy some of the finest harness racing stock of the era.

For more than 40 years, Sheppard pursued his goal of keeping Hanover "the greatest name in harness racing."

Sheppard was succeeded in the the late 1960s by John Simpson, a young horseman who managed the farm with a goal of maintaining the best standardbred broodmare herd in the world.

John's son, Jim Simpson, now president and CEO of Hanover Shoe Farms, carries on this commitment to broodmares. Since 1995, the farm has reinvested about $10 million dollars into championship-caliber broodmares, in addition to the several top stud stallions kept the farm.

One of those studs — Western Hanover — is "arguably the top sire in the business," Simpson said. Semen from the 14-year-old stallion goes for $20,000 a unit, and is shipped all over the U.S. and Canada.

But producing that kind of star quality requires top-notch broodmares, according to Simpson, whose great-grandfather was a thoroughbred jockey in Ireland.

"Blessed are the broodmares," Simpson said."You develop great stallions by developing great broodmares."

He noted that "a great race mare does not necessarily make a great broodmare."

The farm's 100 employees tend the horses and handle maintenance work on the farm. Four fulltime veterinarians manage herd health.

Bridgette Jablonsky, head veterinarian and farm manager, has chief responsibility for the well-being of the herd, which includes the busy foaling season from January through April.

About seven night watchpersons are on duty throughout this time to help ensure successful deliveries.

An 11-month gestation period for horses means that breeding season overlaps with foaling, making the months of February through April particularly hectic. One of Jablonsky's duties during this time is performing pregnanacy health checks using an ultra-sound monitor.

According to Simpson, Jablonsky pays extremely close attention to her work with the horses.

Hanover Shoe Farms is the largest standardbred breeding complex in the world. The name is well-known among the international standardbred and racing communities.

Semen from each stud stallion on the farm is collected four times a week, and each collection can produce enough to service 10 mares — at between $5,000 and $20,000 per service.

Even so, Hanover Shoe Farms "is not an economically thriving operation," Simpson said.

One of the reasons for that, according to Simpson, is that Pennsylvania's racing purses rank only sixth in the nation.

"Competition at neighboring state tracks has been draining hundreds of millions revenue dollars out of Pennsylvania for years," he said.

For those unfamiliar with horseracing, Simpson explained some of the differences between the thoroughbred and standardbred businesses.

In the U.S., thoroughbreds outnumber standardbreds six to one. While thoroughbreds are always raced by jockeys that ride on the horse's back, standardbred race horses in the U.S. are guided by a driver in a one-man cart known as a sulky.

Simpson has spent his whole life with standardbreds and was a driver for 25 years.

Taking over the helm here was a natural move for Simpson, considering his long history with Hanover and standardbred horses.

"Our heart's in the place," he said.

An overview of commodities used annually at Hanover Shoe Farms includes:

- 1,150 tons of hay and 1,200 tons of straw.
- 3,000 locust posts.
- 5,000 oak fence boards.
- 9,800 gallons diesel fuel.
- 34,000 gallons gasoline.

The farm has a total of 163 buildings, including barns, utility sheds, and 43 tenant houses for employees.

Locally bought and maintained equipment on the farm includes 33 trucks, 19 tractors, and five 15-foot-wide batwing mowers.

Regular Testing Ensures Health At The Sale Barn

MICHELLE KUNJAPPU
Lancaster Farming Staff

NEW HOLLAND (Lancaster Co.) — In only a short time on a typical Monday, Dr. Jim Holt may press a stethoscope to a horse's side, stop to answer a horse owner's question, consult his clipboard to search for a number, answer the phone, and consult his clipboard again.

Finding a number not crossed off, he'll begin again a search for a horse — in between answering more questions or checking results at the laboratory on the premises.

A veterinarian who works at New Holland Sales Stables every Monday, Holt is in charge of administering the Coggins test to horses sold at the auction.

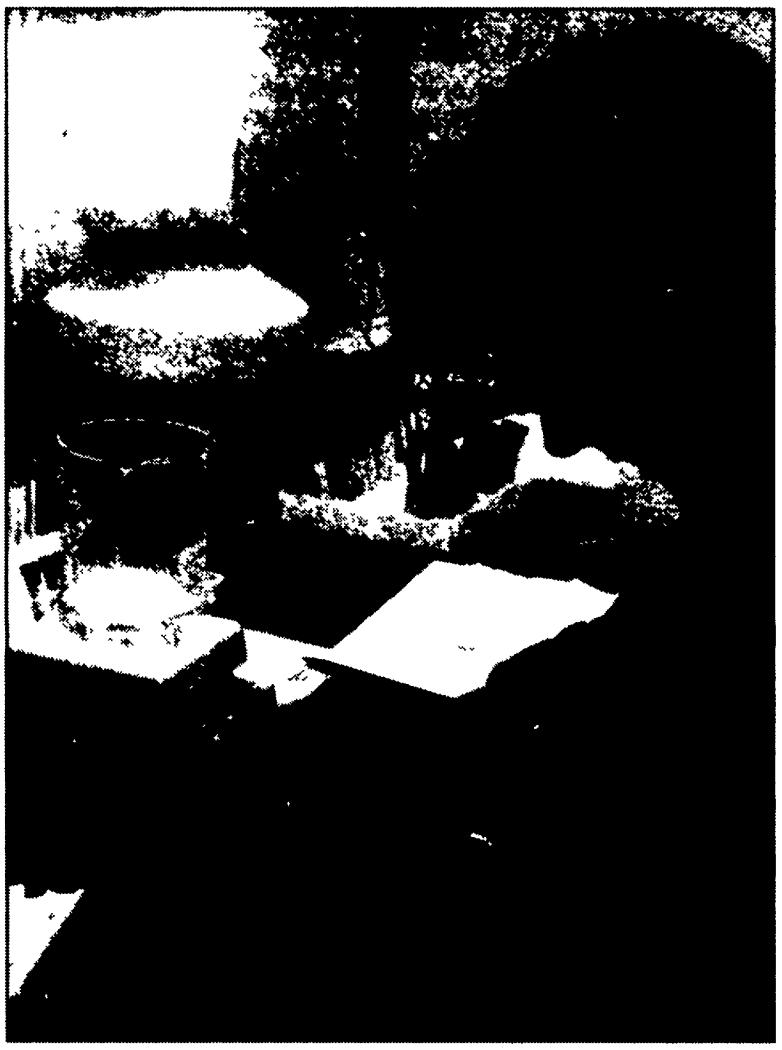
Holt also checks horses to decide whether they are legal to sell. He checks body condition and evaluates lameness, wounds, blindness in both eyes, and debilitating diseases.

"Essentially what we're trying to do is interpret Pennsylvania's animal cruelty law," said Holt.

"Things have improved dramatically at the sale barn in the last several years," he said. "We don't see the problematic horses as frequently."

Also the relationship between the SPCA and the sale barn has improved, according to Holt.

In the spring, 200-300 horses may be auctioned off every Monday. Holt and his assistants administer the Coggins test to 40-100 of those horses. This requires drawing blood, as Holt demonstrates here.



Lab technician Carol Stevens runs two Coggins tests in the laboratory. Here she prepares for the agar test, which takes 24-48 hours to run.

"Although people may believe that this is a slaughter-only sale, on average 10 percent or less of the horses go to slaughter," he said.

Testing For EIA

Mandatory for horses coming to the auction from outside of Pennsylvania, the test is for equine infectious anemia (EIA), a viral disease. Pennsylvania does not require Coggins testing on in-state horse transactions.

Owners of horses coming in from outside of Pennsylvania are responsible, if their horse has not already been tested, to have the horse Coggins tested at the sales stable.

Owners of a newly-purchased horse may also opt to pay the $20 to have their horse tested, since the test is required, for example, to participate in shows. They can find out results in two hours.

Although EIA "is not common compared to the number of tests that we run," according to Holt, "there is no vaccine and there is no treatment," so the test is important.

However, "we've only had two positives since we started the lab three years ago," he said.

Biting insects — usually flies — spread the disease, in addition to a needle used on an infected horse and then used on an uninfected animal.

Holt arrives at the sale barn a half hour before the sale starts to go through the list of horses consigned "to decide who needs tested and who doesn't," he said.

Arriving early also allows him to "go through while the horses are somewhat stationary," although with horses continually being checked in or taken through the ring, finding the horses on his list is a challenge.

In the spring, 200-300 horses may be auctioned off every Monday. Holt and his assistants may test 40-100 of those horses.

Technician Amber Wiedler also helps to find the horses and draw blood. Paperwork for each horse includes recording the horse's number, breed, age, sex, and markings.

In The Lab

Lab technician Carol Stevens runs two different Coggins tests in the laboratory located on sales stable grounds. The ELISA test results are ready in only hours, while the agar test takes 24-48 hours to run.

Stevens runs the Enzyme Linked Immunosorbent Assay (ELISA) test on most of the samples. However horses going to New Jersey, which does not accept ELISA test results, are given the agar test.

According to Stevens, "the ELISA test takes a very small amount of serum," which is separated from the blood samples by a centrifuge. This allows Stevens to test the serum which rises to the top.

Although approximately 70 percent of his job is administering the Coggins test, Holt may also examine horses as they are checked in to the sale barn for possible problems.

He also may evaluate horses that have already been sold, since a horse may be resold "if the owner finds something they can't live with," he said.

Holt is part of Brandywine Veterinary Services, a four-veterinarian practice based in Coatesville. He also works with the dairy cattle at New Holland Sales Stables on Tuesdays and Wednesdays.

Although most of his job is administering Coggins tests, Holt may also evaluate horses for illnesses, such as this pony.

The ELISA test is run in batches. Stevens can test from one sample to "as many as I can keep track of," she said.

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) — Daily feed required for the average adult 1,000-pound horse, approximately, is:

• No work
20-25 pounds hay, no grain
• Light (1-2 hours work/day)
15-20 pounds hay,
1-3 pounds grain
(1-1.5 pounds grain/ hour of work)
• Medium (2-4 hours/day)
15-20 pounds hay,
3-8 pounds grain
(1.5-2 lbs. grain/hour of work)
• Heavy (Four or more hrs./ day)
15-20 pounds hay,
5-10 pounds grain
(1.5-2.5 pounds grain/ hour of work)

Only a horse that is worked extremely hard would ever receive half of its ration in grain. A racehorse in heavy training is an example of a horse requiring half of its ration in grain. So never feed your pleasure horse more than it needs.

Younger horses require special rations, talk to your veterinarian. The above chart can be used as a rule of thumb, or you can be more exact and balance your horse's ration. There are many books available to show you how to balance a horses' ration or contact your local Penn State Cooperative Extension Agent for help.

When balancing or evaluating a ration, use the National Research Council tables as a guideline to determine available nutrients to meet your horse's requirements.

When you balance a ration, determine the age, weight and level of activity or work of the horse, and determine the actual nutrient content of the available feed by sending your feed to a commercial feed-testing laboratory. Contact your local Penn State Cooperative Extension agent for the name of the laboratory nearest you.

Always be careful not to create an excess of other nutrients when increasing feed ingredient levels. Excesses of some nutrients can interact with other nutrients. For example, excess calcium can prevent complete utilization of phosphorus. Check National Research Council tables for calcium to phosphorus ratios; however, a good rule of thumb is a 2:1 ratio.

Metabolic disorders, such as laminitis, osteochondrosis and epiphysitis, stem from an imbalance in nutrients. Many disorders can be avoided by giving your horse a balanced ration. Remember, each horse has to be fed as an individual.

Feed an amount that is adequate to maintain a body condition similar to that of an athlete. The National Research Council requirements are suggested values; individual horses may require adjustments to these nutrients.

Constantly assess the body condition of your horse. A properly conditioned horse will have enough fat so its ribs don't show, but you should still be able to feel the ribs when you run your fingers over them.

Feeding Tips

These helpful hints will help you care for your horse nutritionally.

• Provide high quality alfalfa or grass roughage with a complementing grain to balance the horse's diet. Feed by weight, not by volume.

• Always maintain at least half of the ration as roughage, such as hay or grass.

• Never feed moldy or dusty hay, grass or grain.

• Never feed lawn grass clippings.

• Have fresh, clean water available at all times — except to a hot horse. A hot horse needs to be given water slowly.

• Watch your horse while it eats and inspect feed containers daily to detect abnormal eating or drinking behaviors.

• Check horse's teeth annually for sharp points that interfere with chewing. Floating sharp edges of teeth will increase feed efficacy. If a horse dips mouth in water while eating, it may have a sharp tooth. Tilting head to one side while eating grain may indicate a tooth problem.

• Ration changes should be gradual, over a minimum of five days to prevent digestive disturbances.

• Because a horse's stomach is very small and cannot hold a large amount of feed at one time, it should be fed at least twice a day on a regular schedule. Some horses benefit from three or more feedings per day. But don't overfeed your horse; too much feed at one time can cause founder.

Estimate your horse's body weight. Multiply the girth (in inches) times itself (heart girth 2) times the body length (in inches) and divide by 330. Example: Heart Girth = 74.8 inches Body length = 63 inches 74.8 x 74.8 x 63 330 Equals 1,068 pounds.

Consider Alfalfa For Your Horse's Feeding Program

MADISON, Wis. — Once considered unsuitable for horses because it was "too nutritious," alfalfa has become established as the premier forage for horses.

The high levels of energy, protein, minerals, and vitamins contained in alfalfa are why purebred breeders and trainers nationwide have made high quality alfalfa the centerpiece of their horse nutritional programs.

Horses have developed a reputation for being complicated animals to feed, largely because they are more sensitive to dietary changes, nutritional imbalances and physical characteristics of feed than other classes of livestock.

Basing a horse's nutritional program on high quality alfalfa reduces many of the problems associated with feeding traditional high grain diets; alfalfa supplies high levels of energy, minerals, and protein while also providing sufficient fiber for proper digestive health.

Nutritional Factors To Consider

Alfalfa contains virtually every nutrient required for proper nutrition of horses.

However, it is commonly recommended that a reduced quantity of alfalfa be fed with some grain supplementation to prevent feeding of excessive levels of protein and calcium.

The table shows the nutritional requirements of various classes of horses and typical diets containing high quality alfalfa (harvested at first flower) that can be fed to meet these needs.

The general rule of thumb is that a mature horse will eat approximately two percent of its body weight daily. Grain should not exceed 50 percent of the diet, and more than six pounds of grain per day should be fed in two separate feedings at least six hours apart.

Always allow horses free-choice access to water, salt, and a phosphorous-containing mineral supplement.

Physical Factors Affecting Alfalfa Utilization By Horses

Stem texture, stem diameter, and leafiness have all been shown to impact alfalfa palatability and utilization by horses. The horse is more apt to sort forage than other livestock species and will commonly refuse to eat coarse-textured stems.

Alfalfa varieties selected for higher forage quality (i.e. the W-L HQ line) generally possess finer stems and greater leafiness, both characteristics that improve palatability and utilization when fed to horses. Alfalfa hay with finer stems and softer stem texture is more attractive to horses, contributing to greater intake and less wastage when fed.

Anti-Quality Factors Should Be Avoided

Anti-quality factors most commonly affect horses include: molds, dustiness, blister beetles, and toxic weeds. Moldy hay is usually caused by baling hay before it is sufficiently dry, and should never be fed to horses. Because the horse is not a ruminant, they are unable to degrade mold toxins during digestion, and thus are very sensitive to the presence of even small amounts of mold toxins in their diets.

Dustiness (often caused by rain damage or by being baled too dry) can often be eliminated by soaking the hay in water prior to feeding. Presoaking all hay, whether dusty or not, has been shown to significantly reduce the incidence of respiratory problems in horses fed alfalfa hay.

One of the most commonly discussed, and infrequently observed, concerns with alfalfa feeding to horses is the presence of blister beetles. The blister beetle contains the compound cantharidin, which is extremely toxic to horses, even in small amounts.

Managing alfalfa hay prior to harvest has proven effective in reducing or eliminating blister beetle infestations; under no circumstance should blister beetle-infected alfalfa hay be fed to any animal.

Alfalfa hay intended for horse diets should be virtually weed free. Certain weeds, such as nightshade, can be toxic to horses.

In addition, weeds slow the drying rate of alfalfa hay, which often leads to molds and dustiness. If a significant quantity of weeds are observed in a lot of hay, an alternative source of forage should be considered.

In conclusion, proper nutrition, including the feeding of high quality alfalfa varieties (e.g. WL 325HQ) will greatly enhance the performance, health, and longevity of a horse and can significantly reduce supplemental feed costs and veterinary bills.

Feeds

in protein, energy, vitamins and calcium.

Hay can be long-stemmed in hay bales, or come bagged in cubes, or pellets. Many horse owners feed grass hay or straight alfalfa or a combination of grass and alfalfa to their horses. Grasses commonly used as hay are brome, orchard, and timothy.

Long stem hay is the traditional baled hay. It is cut, cured, and baled. It can be bundled in 50- to 80-pound square bales or large, round or long square bales that can weigh tons.

Hay cubes are about an inch wide and 1- to 3-inches long. Hay pellets are ground hay compressed into two inch by ½ inch pellets.

Horses need good quality hay. It should be bright green, leafy and fine textured, with a fresh, pleasant aroma. Musty hay, or other indications of mold or heating, and dust, weeds and other foreign material in hay can be unhealthy for an animal.

Color is an indicator of quality and nutrient content; good hay is a bright green. Most nutrients in hay are in the leaves, and leafy hay is a valuable source of food.

Leafiness is influenced by the kind of hay, its maturity when cut, the weather conditions while growing and curing the hay, and curing procedures of the hay.

Dust is objectionable in any feed for horses. It not only reduces the taste of the hay, it also aggravates respiratory problems. Sprinkling or dunking dusty hay in water can reduce dust. Avoid feeding moldy or dusty hay. In the field, heavy rain can break off drying hay leaves and leaches energy and protein from the hay.

Hay baled before it is dry enough will lose nutrients through fermentation, or heating in the bale. This sometimes starts fires through spontaneous combustion in barnyard stacks of stored, baled hay. This type of hay is unacceptable for horses.

Good pasture or grass that an animal can graze can be an economical food for horses, but pasture must be maintained. If animals are allowed to graze on a pasture too long, the grass may be killed.

Well-managed pastures reduce feed costs and provide energy, protein, vitamins and minerals to animals. An exercise lot with a few blades of grass is not a pasture; such a lot, or overgrazed pasture, is not a source of nutrients and can be a serious source of internal parasites. When a grass stand becomes too thin, overgrown, coarse or unappetizing to a horse, it should be clipped or mowed.

Lush pasture forages can act as a laxative in early spring and may cause founder. Introduce horses gradually to pastures by slowly increasing their daily grazing time.

Concentrates

Small grains, such as corn, oats and barley, are known as concentrates. Concentrates are lower in fiber and higher in energy than roughages.

The grain should be clean, mold- and insect-free, with a bright color. Grain quality is just as important as hay quality. Grains may be cracked, steamed or rolled, but, if ground too finely, may cause respiratory problems or colic.

Oats are the safest and easiest grain to feed with hay because it is high in fiber and low in energy, and higher in protein than corn.

Corn has the highest energy content of any grain and can put weight on a horse quickly. It can be fed on the ear, cracked, rolled or shelled.

Barley is an intermediate source of energy and protein content. All grains are low in calcium, but high in phosphorus.

Supplements

Protein and vitamin-mineral supplements are added to the diet to increase the diet's concentration. Grains are energy supplements to a high forage diet.

Only add supplements to the diet if something is missing. Some protein supplements are oilseed meals, soybeans, cottonseed, linseed (flaxseed) meal, peanut meal, sunflower seed meal and rapeseed (canola). Vitamin and mineral supplements should only be added to the diet if the horse is deficient.

Generally, the only minerals of concern in feeding horses are calcium, phosphorus and salt. In some geographical areas, lack of selenium and, in growing horses, copper and zinc, is a concern. Other minerals are likely to be present in adequate amounts in a normal diet.

Commercial grain mixes or complete feeds concentrated mixes are cereal grains with supplements added to increase the specific nutrient content of the mix. A complete feed is a grain mix that is high in fiber because it contains a forage or high-fiber byproducts feed such as hulls.

Complete feeds are held together, usually by extrusion (puffed up like dog food) or by forming into pellets. If you are feeding a commercial complete feed, you will not need to feed hay (follow the label for feeding recommendations). There are also feeds for specific classes of horses.

Some feeds are specially formulated for young, growing horses (weanlings and yearlings); and for geriatric (aged) horses that are old and have specific nutritional needs. Some commercial feed companies make premixed, convenient, easy-to-use formulated feeds for horses that are on different hay diets such as grass or alfalfa. You should not need to add any other supplements to the diet.

These feeds may be more expensive than developing your own ration, but they are good for the owner who does not want to spend time to research their horse's diet.

Nutrient requirements for different horses the nutrient requirements of a horse vary with its age, weight and the amount of work it performs. Good quality hay is sufficient feed for a mature horse that is ridden very little. With an increase in work, grain should be added to its diet.

Pa. Horse World Expo Debuts At Farm Show Complex

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — The Pennsylvania Horse World Expo debuted at the Farm Show Complex in Harrisburg from Friday, Feb. 28 through Sunday, March 2.

Horse World Expo was a huge public trade show for all things equine. Visitors came to see and meet horses of all breeds and types, learn everything from the basics of choosing your first horse to sophisticated training tips from international experts, refine their skills, and buy anything from a horse-themed lamp to a huge horse trailer.

While this year marked the debut of the Horse World Expo in Pennsylvania, the event itself has a long history. Horse World Expo started in Maryland seven years ago, and two years ago expanded to central New Jersey. The producers of the event had been working to bring the Expo to Pennsylvania for four years.

"Tens of thousands of people come to our Expos every year," said Denise Parsons, president of Equestrian Promotions, Inc., the company that produces the Expo. "We've wanted to produce an event in Pennsylvania for some time, and the Farm Show Complex with its renovations is truly ideal. It's designed for equestrian events, and we were able to present not just our seminars and breed demonstrations, but the outstanding Theatre Equus — A Musical Equine Review performances for two evenings."

This picture features the opening ceremony of the event, which is conducted at several venues throughout the year. Harrisburg's event was conducted Feb. 28 through March 2.

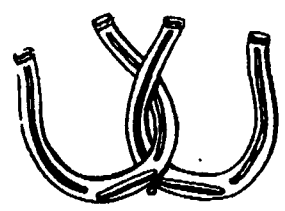
Theatre Equus — A Musical Equine Review is like a Broadway theatrical event, only the actors were all horses. Featuring totally different horses and riders from the daytime seminars and presentations, Theatre Equus — A Musical Equine Review brought performers from across the U.S. ranging from Andalusian horses to trick riders together into a two-hour show.

In addition the Horse World Expo offered something for everyone from the casual visitor to the industry professional. One of the attractions of the Expo was the vast array of vendors, clinicians, horses, breeders, and industry professionals all gathered in one place. Especially for people just starting to get interested in horses, the Expo offered a rare chance to compare things side by side and learn from international experts.

The speakers and seminars were one of the hallmarks of the Horse World Expos. John Lyons, perhaps America's formost authority on gentle, natural horse training, brought his renowned methods to different seminars every day. Trainers in every discipline presented lectures and demonstrations, and the Pennsylvania Equine Council revealed the economic impact of equestrian activities in the state.



British Rare Breeds On Parade Exhibit Coming To Ky.

LEXINGTON, Ky. — The American Livestock Breeds Conservancy (ALBC) has been invited by the Kentucky Horse Park to put on a three-day live exhibition of British rare equine breeds in conjunction with the Park's International Museum of the Horse to complement their new international exhibit "All the Queen's Horses", which will explore the rich equestrian heritage of Britain.

Twelve breeds will be represented. Horses included are: Cleveland Bay, Clydesdale, Hackney Horse, Irish Draught, Shire, and the Suffolk Punch.

Ponies included are: Dales, Dartmoor, Eriskay (informational only), Exmoor, Fell, and the Highland.

These breeds will be on exhibit in the Kentucky Horse Park's historic "Big Barn" built in 1897, one of the largest wooden barns in North America.

This rare collection of equines will also be highlighted in the Park's Breeds Barn Arena and the Hall of Champions in parades and demonstrations beginning with an instructional British Rare Breed show open competition on Friday, June 20.

The show will be judged by two well-known British judges and authors, Clive Richardson and Sue Millard.

ALBC will preside over a 3-day schedule of lectures and clinics designed to promote rare British breeds with an emphasis on education and conservation.

Visitors will have the chance to browse the exhibit's information tables and booths, talk with breeders, and see an unprecedented display of endangered British horses and ponies while exploring the possibility of participating in their conservation.

For more information, photos, or article opportunities related to this event, please contact Victoria Tollman, Volunteer Equine Coordinator, Fellpony@access-4-free.com, PO Box 24, Cottage Grove, OR 97424 USA, (541) 998-3234.

Haflingers: All-Around Family Pony In A Pretty Package

Breed standards set by the World Haflinger Federation dicate that the ponies can be a chestnut color in all shades from light to dark with light colored manes and tails.

Although they are fairly new arrivals to the U.S. (the first Haflinger was imported in 1958), the American Haflinger Registry (AHR) represents more than 1,900 North American Haflinger owners and more than 14,000 Haflingers.

The organization was formed in 1998.

Breed History

According to information from www.haflingerhorses.com, the breed originates from the Southern Tyrolean Mountains of present day Austria and northern Italy. The Haflinger is named for the Tyrolean village of Hafling.

Since the villages and farms in the Tyrol were accessible only by narrow paths, the ponies were agile and surefooted ponies. Artwork from the region from the early 1800s depict a small chestnut pony with packs and riders traversing steep mountain trails.

The first official documentation of the present day Haflinger was in 1874 when the foundation stallion "249 Folie" was born of the half-Arab stallion crossebred with a native Tyrolean mare.

During World War II, according to the website, pack horses were needed by the military and a shorter draftier Haflinger fit the bill. Postwar, the height and refinement of the breed has reported to the U.S. for pulling contests.

All-Around Family Pony

Since 1996 Wayne "Red" Deibler, owner, and Gerald Allebach, farm manager, have operated Spring View Farm, a Haflinger operation.

Haflinger Ponies

The 50-acre farm, a converted dairy operation, usually has about 25 Haflingers at one time.

In his experience with the breed, Allebach has found them to be hardy, tough, durable, easy keepers, easy foaling and having vigorous foals, besides having "get up and drive," he said.

The term "horse" or "pony" is often used interchangeably by Haflinger owners. However technically they are a pony, since most of the animals stand at 14.2 hands or under, the definition of a pony, said Allebach.

The ponies can be a variety of sizes, since the registry does not have a maximum or minimum standard for height to register foals.

"They're stout — even small and medium-size Haflingers can carry an adult well," he said.

"Haflingers are promoted and sold as an all-around family pony," he said.

"They're supposed to carry kids to adults and then hook up to the wagon and drive," he said, citing examples of Haflingers hauling a full-size manure spreaders.

The Amish community has found that the ponies are the right temperament and have the desire and drive for work, are durable and yet easy keepers, and have been able to use the breed on their farms, according to Allebach.

Additionally, "in our society, people need recreation, and their ponies are a source of recreation and physical activity.

"The education of breeding ponies and raising foals is priceless. It also gives people such a source of pride."

Pennsylvania has the largest numbers of Haflingers, but Ohio and Indiana also host many of the ponies, although they are marketed all over the U.S.

Breeding, Market

"The most important part in a pony's conformation is its heart and its brain.

"It could be the most beautiful pony in the world, but it needs to be trainable," to be allowed to breed on Spring View Farm, he said.

"We're really careful about our crosses, to create good

Penn State Researchers Working On Contraception For Wild Horses

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — It's a long way — in terms of miles, habitat and species — from domesticated ponies in the verdant meadows of central Pennsylvania to wild mustangs in the parched high deserts of Arizona, California, Nevada, New Mexico and Wyoming, but research under way in Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences is bringing them closer together.

Researchers hope that contraception methods that seem to work in a small herd of ponies kept in a lush, partially wooded pasture at the Penn State Horse Farm not far from Beaver Stadium can be applied to hundreds of thousands of wild horses out West where overpopulation is straining habitats and wildlife management budgets.

"A pony is considered to be any horse that is less than 14.2 hands (58 inches) high," explains Nancy Diehl, assistant professor of equine science. "Actually, ponies are a lot closer in size to the mustangs than the 1,200-pound quarter horses we have at Penn State. It makes sense to do our research with ponies. We currently have a herd of 14 ponies — 13 mares and a stallion."

Most contraception work with wildlife — and that is what the wild horses of the West are considered — has been done using vaccines, according to Diehl. Penn State Distinguished Professor Gary Killian, who has done extensive contraception research with white-tailed deer, has teamed on the pony project with Diehl, whose expertise is horse behavior.

"We are inserting intrauterine devices (IUDs) very similar to the ones that prove so effective in preventing human pregnancies," says Diehl, who is a veterinarian. "We are trying this new approach because the vaccines only seem to prevent pregnancies for a year or so. This appears to be a longer-lasting, more effective method of dealing with wild horse overpopulation in the West."

Under federal law, wild horses are managed differently than any other wild mammals whose numbers become a problem. The Wild Free-Roaming Horses and Burros Act of 1971, as amended in 1976, prohibits the killing or slaughter of any wild horses or burros. They can be collected for adoption by private citizens — and thousands annually are — but that program is limited by the difficulty and unpredictability of the taming process.

"The reality is that not nearly enough wild horses are adopted to control the wild populations, and many western states now collect thousands of the animals and keep them in holding facilities that are humane, but crowded and demoralizing to the captive horses," says Diehl, who journeyed to the Reno, Nev., area last year to assess the situation firsthand.

"From a behavioral standpoint, the holding facilities are disasters for the horses they hold. The states are doing the best they can, but the horses collected can never be released back into the wild, and most are there for as long as they live."

The IUD approach is promising, but Diehl and Killian know that inserting them in wild horses won't be as easy as with domestic ponies.

"The ponies are docile and just stand there," says Diehl. "With the wild mustangs, they would have to be inserted as part of a program that involves capturing and administering anesthesia to take blood samples, etc. We are working with the state wildlife agency in Nevada, and professor Killian went to the West and inserted IUDs in 15 captured mustangs last year.

"They are presently being monitored. Officials in the state agencies seem to be encouraged by methods we are developing. We are working closely with Nevada's state veterinarian and researchers at the National Wildlife Research Center in Fort Collins, Colo., who are collaborating in the study.

Wild horses are reproducing at an alarming rate. Wildlife management officials are concerned because the herds have been increasing by 15 to 20 percent per year, doubling their population every four years.

Before the federal protection was passed, wild horses were victims of ruthless and indiscriminate slaughter for commercial purposes and their numbers plummeted.

Although horses evolved in North America, no one is sure why they didn't exist on this continent at the time of European exploration.

Spanish explorers reintroduced horses to North America beginning in the late 15th century, and Native Americans helped spread horses throughout the Great Plains and the West. Until as recently as the mid-20th century, horses continued to be released onto public lands by the U.S. cavalry, farmers, ranchers and miners.

For Diehl, it won't be enough to learn that the IUDs just prevent pregnancy. She must be certain they don't wreck the wild horses' social structure. "There are many questions to be answered," she says. "We want to know that they stay in and work under natural breeding conditions. We need to know that they are safe for the horses. We are monitoring the ponies really closely, and the IUDs so far are preventing pregnancies. We won't be able to do that with the wild mustangs.

"But we also want to be sure they won't effect their normal behavior," she adds. "Wild horses have a very important social structure that is made up of small groups consisting of a stallion and a harem of mares. We want to see the affects of mares not getting pregnant. There no doubt will be more wear and tear on the stallions. We will be monitoring their behavior as well as their physiology. We must be sure not to alter the harem structure, because if we change the harem structure, we change wild horses as we know them."

sound mind and sound body animals."

They begin breeding mares mid February through June. Ideally the foals would be born early in the year so they are strong and ready for the winter, besides being larger more filled out in the show ring than their younger counterparts.

Last year the farm's entire foal crop was sold off of the farm to other Haflinger breeders but also first-time buyers. Allebach especially enjoys introducing new buyers to the breed, and works hard to match ponies with buyers.

"When somebody walks onto the farm, we ask a lot of questions about their goals, what they want to do with the pony, or how it will be housed before we tell them what is for sale," he said.

In 1996, when they began work on the Haflinger farm, the animals were very expensive, according to Allebach.

"The market has settled out, but they're still not extremely cheap," he said. "Some are still expensive, but they are also priced so people can buy for normal pleasure animals."

A gelding sold as a pleasure animal will bring a few thousand and "a good breeding mare will start up from there," he said.

A mature breeding mare can be $5,000 and up, and "great mares will be $10,000 and over." Stallions are in the same bracket.

"The American market is different than the European market," he said. "Americans want a blaze face but that's gradually getting to be less important. Also, Americans like white manes and tails."

As time goes on, the copper color is becoming more popular, according to Allebach.

"The foals can be born one color but that changes a lot," he said.

Show ring success helped Allebach decide to ship semen, which the farm sells for $500, all over the U.S.

The farm's primary sire, "Musketeer," nicknamed "Turbo," is a current national champion.

The Show Ring

The show circuit has tested and proved the breeding decisions made on the farm.

"We've shown at the national show six years since we've started and had six grand champion stallions with four different stallions," according to Allebach.

In addition, for three years they also had the reserve champion stallion.

The farm's Haflingers compete in the show ring from August through November.

"We don't want to interrupt our family life or the day-to-day raising of ponies," he said. "We want it (exhibiting ponies) to complement, not take over what we do — we breed and raise ponies, and provide customer support."

Allebach is joined by his wife, Melissa, who also helps on the farm, along with their sons Jared, 13; Jesse, 11; and Abraham, 3.

For the Haflinger breed, the U.S. and Canada conduct both draft and light type shows. In the draft classes, the ponies are shown in halter and hitch classes and are judged on having high-headed, high-stepping style.

In the light classes, the ponies are shown in halter or pleasure driving and should look relaxed, "just like a Sunday afternoon drive," he said.

Allebach, who grew up around draft horses, transferred his knowledge to judging Haflingers. "I started doing Haflinger shows because they're shown like draft horses," said Allebach.

He judged the national show, which travels to a different state each year, in 1992.

It was in the show circuit that he met Red Deibler, who asked Allebach to help him get started with owning several animals.

In addition to managing the Haflinger operation, he also helps his father with the family's nearby Percheron farm.

Fire Safety — 30 Seconds Is All Your Horse Has

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) — Today's horse owner provides adequate training for horse and rider, proper equipment, balanced nutritional needs of the horse, and stabling facilities. Missing from books and lectures is a chapter on fire prevention and the course of action to take in case of fire.

Young people receive the best available instruction in equitation, but few have any idea of how to react in a disaster situation such as fire.

Fire is the most terrible death that can befall an animal, especially the horse, because the horse is penned securely within its corral and stable. The horse owner almost surely has committed to memory the telephone number of the veterinarian but does not know the number to dial in case of fire.

Fire prevention and safety are the duty of every person involved with and around horses. Many of the preventative measures apply whether the facility is at a track, a training barn, summer camp stable or backyard barn.

Fire safety involves common sense and a trained response. The responsibility of ownership does not lie solely in the daily care of the horse. The horse is totally dependent upon the owner's awareness and consideration of his needs when an emergency arises.

Be safety conscious at all times. Fires give little warning. Rehearse the necessary course of action to be followed with members of your family, your boarders, youth in training, and others directly involved with the animals in the barn in the event of fire.

Conspicuously post the number of the local fire department by all telephones. Fire prevention is easier to preach than practice, but it is a vital part of horse ownership and management.

Stable Fires

The official records of the National Fire Protection Association show that the majority of fires in stables (figures compiled from reported fires at racetracks, breeding farms and fairgrounds) are caused mainly by misuse of electrical apparatus, heaters and careless smoking. Other causes of fires are lightening, arson and spontaneous combustion.

Because more and more horse owners are moving out to a small acreage of their own and building their own stables and horse barns, this article will focus on the small scale horse facility.

Almost all horse barns have the following in common:

- Wood construction, either totally or partially;
- Bedding straw, sawdust or shavings in stalls;
- Storage of hay, bedding straw or shavings in close proximity to the barns;
- Highly combustible materials within (leather, blankets, ropes, oils and so forth); and
- People.

A horse standing in a bed of straw might just as well be standing in a pool of gasoline should a fire occur. The burning rate of loose straw is approximately three times that of the burning rate of gasoline.

The horse in a stall where the fire originates has only 30 seconds to escape. The flame spread and heat is so rapid that a fire, once started, is out of control in a matter of minutes.

These startling statistics dramatically emphasize the fact that a stable fire, once underway, does not give much time for evacuation of horses.

Automatic sprinkler systems are advocated for commercial facilities such as racetracks and large breeding establishments and other commercial-type enterprises. However, from a monetary point of view, automatic sprinkler systems generally are not included in the smaller scale operations.

Water-type fire extinguishers are effective if used within the first minute. Since stable fires develop rapidly due to the abundance of combustible materials, fire extinguishers are of little or no use once the fire has gained burning time (60 seconds).

Fire spreads rapidly, as does panic. Quick action is necessary to save the life of a horse. The person who is knowledgeable in the correct course of action will be more effective than five people in a panic state.

Fire prevention and safety should be taught along with basic equitation by trainers, organizations and parents. As schools have fire drills for the students, so should the barn manager and trainer instruct students in the course of action to follow in case of fire. Someone at your barn should be responsible for posting fire rules. The following procedures can help.

Stable Construction

The majority of barns (training, boarding, rental and backyard) are constructed of combustible materials such as wood.

Brick, stone or cement-block barns are thought to be fairly fireproof, but exterior construction does not slow the internal spread of fire, which is fed by the highly combustible materials within (wood, straw, shavings, leather, tack, ropes, oils and so forth).

Fire retardant paints are most effective and desirable in checking or retarding a fire, but of course they have no effect upon bedding materials used in stalls or the interior contents of the barn.

Building manufacturing companies now feature a line of prefabricated metal barns. In addition, there are also a number of companies that feature a complete line of metal corrals and fence panels. Overhead shelter installations used with these corrals also are of a lightweight metal. This type of installation offers the most as far as being "fireproof."

Overhead sprinkler systems, such as those developed exclusively for use in horse barns, are highly effective in extinguishing fires within barns. Unfortunately, this type of installation is very expensive and not in widespread use.

Thought should be given to installing extra large water lines with adequate outlets inside and outside the barn, all equipped with large water hoses.

The type construction that allows air to flow freely to ventilate a stabling facility unfortunately aids in ventilating and fanning a fire.

In the interest of safety, all stalls should have outside doors whether or not there are adjoining paddocks. In the case of paddocks, they also should have outside gates.

Much can be done to diminish the ever constant threat of fire. The precautionary measures previously stated are common sense. Those who live and work around horses must know the proper actions to take in case of fire so the lives of individuals and horses and the loss of property can be minimized.

Due to the materials involved, it is doubtful there ever will be a "fireproof" barn, but certainly these basic steps will help reduce the threat of fire, if followed.

Recommendations For Fire Prevention

1. Smoking in horse stalls, feed rooms and under sheds is prohibited.
2. No sleeping will be allowed in any of the feed rooms or stalls at any time.
3. Stalls occupied by horses will not be blocked at any time. Tack rooms will not be locked unless occupied.
4. No open fires will be allowed anywhere in the stable area.
5. No oil or gas burning lanterns or lamps will be allowed in the stable area.
6. All electrical appliances used in stable areas must be in a safe working condition. When in use, they must be kept at a safe distance from walls, beds and other furnishings. They should not be left unattended when in use.
7. No flammable materials, such as cleaning fluids or solvents, will be used in the stable area.
8. No hay or straw may be stored under the sheds or outside feed rooms at any time.
9. The alleyway in front of stalls must be kept free of debris and open at all times to give easy access to each stall door in case of fire.
10. All pets, such as dogs, cats, poultry, goats, and so forth, will not be allowed to run at large in the stable area but must be properly and suitably confined at all times.

OSU Equine Experts Recommend Vaccination Of Horses For West Nile Virus

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Ohio State University equine internists are recommending that horse owners vaccinate their animals against West Nile vaccine for equines, including horses. The vaccine was to be available starting in September and officials are recommending that horses be vaccinated twice this fall. The vaccine requires an initial dose and second dose three to six weeks later.

Horse owners who are interested in vaccinating their horses should contact their local veterinarian, and veterinarians are being encouraged to place orders so the company will have some indication of the demand for the vaccine.

The vaccine is made with a killed virus and has limited efficacy data. However, a similar vaccine for Japanese Encephalitis virus, which is closely related to West Nile virus, has been used for many years. The efficiency of the Japanese Encephalitis vaccine has been reported at 80 percent. Cases of West Nile virus in horses have occurred as late as October 2000 in the eastern United States.

As part of the safety study of the vaccine, 649 horses and ponies were vaccinated. Systemic or local reactions occurred in very few of the vaccinated horses. Three horses had localized site reactions (swelling and soreness); two horses were reported to have a fever following the initial vaccination only; and two horses had other reactions (mild diarrhea within eight hours of injection in one horse and one horse was treated for colic within a few hours of the initial vaccination). According to the report filed by Fort Dodge Animal Health, the vaccine did not induce any severe local or systemic adverse reactions in 98.5 percent of the vaccinations. Therefore, the vaccine appears to be safe.

Horse owners planning to export their animals should be aware that vaccinated animals may not meet the import requirements of receiving countries due to the presence of anti-West Nile virus antibodies in blood. While these antibodies are present transiently, presence of the antibody when the horse is due to be exported could result in denial of permission to import.

In horses that do become clinically ill, the virus infects the central nervous system and causes signs of encephalitis. Clinical signs of encephalitis in horses include loss of appetite and depression, in addition to any combination of the following: fever, weakness or paralysis of hind limbs; impaired vision; ataxia (incoordination); head pressing; aimless wandering; convulsions; inability to swallow; circling; hyperexcitability or coma.

Horse owners are encouraged not to become complacent once their horses have been vaccinated. Elimination of mosquito breeding sites and personal protection are still important. Another important role the horse owner may play in efforts to prevent West Nile virus is to continue to report dead bird sightings to their local health department. The local health department will determine if those dead birds should be transported to ODA for pathologic examination.

USDA Needs Help From Horse Owners With West Nile Vaccinated Horses

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) — Veterinarians have been asked by the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture to help determine the immune response of West Nile Virus vaccinated horses.

The Fort Dodge equine vaccine for protection against disease from WNV infection was made available to Pennsylvania veterinarians in mid-September of 2002. Very little information concerning the immune response in vaccinated horses is available at this time.

The Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture is requesting that veterinarians ask clients with vaccinated horses to allow blood samples to be taken between seven and 21 days after the second vaccine dose. These samples should be submitted in chilled red-top tubes to the Pennsylvania Veterinary Laboratory for antibody testing.

At this time, there are no charges for shipping and testing of WNV samples. The dates of vaccinations should be included in the box with the samples. If your veterinarian asked for your help in this study please consider participating.

The ELISA test is used to detect IgG antibodies in vaccinated horses within a seven to 21 day time period. Results of testing of vaccinated horses will be submitted to the USDA. Horse owners will not be sent the results.

Newly Patented Virus Could Help Control Disease-Carrying Mosquitoes

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — One mosquito genus, called Culex,has been found to transmit WNV and the closely related St. Louis encephalitis (SLE). Now Agricultural Research Service scientists have received a patent for a baculovirus — a virus specific to arthropods — that kills Culex mosquitoes. The patent also includes a method for transmitting the baculovirus to them. The baculovirus infects only Culex mosquitoes — not other insects, plants, wildlife or people.

Baculoviruses are extremely uncommon in mosquitoes. However, James J. Becnel, an entomologist with the ARS Center for Medical, Agricultural and Veterinary Entomology in Gainesville, Fla., discovered a novel baculovirus in 1997. Called CuniNPV, it is very stable and persistent and is a promising candidate to develop into a larvicide.

The baculovirus is activated when it is mixed with magnesium. When the mixture is added into any body of water where mosquitoes breed, larvae ingest it.

According to Becnel, the virus can kill 85 to 95 percent of mosquitoes in their natural habitat after two to three days. The magnesium will not harm the water.

ARS, the U.S. Department of Agriculture's chief scientific research agency, is seeking partners to license the technology and bring it to the market.

Waterers May Be A Breeding Ground For Mosquitoes

May Pose West Nile Virus Risk For Livestock

EPHRATA (Lancaster Co.) — Since the outbreak of West Nile Virus (WNV) in 1999 there have been over 15,000 confirmed cases of horses infected with WNV in the United States and Canada. Health officials have been warning people to remove standing water so the mosquitoes will not be able to reproduce. One possible source is the large open stock tanks that livestock, including horses, drink from.

Large stock tanks in the pasture are the perfect breeding ground for mosquitoes. Many of these tanks are filled automatically with an attached float and valve so that even though horses are drinking out of the tank, the water is never completely drained thus allowing for the "egg to hatch" cycle of a mosquito to be completed.

Birds are attracted to these tanks as well; if they are infected, they can pass the WNV to mosquitoes where they breed.

Studies have shown that when the surface of the water is disturbed the larvae of the mosquito will swim to the bottom of the water tank. So even though a horse may be drinking, the mosquito larvae will not be removed from the tank at that time. And in a large tank of water, the agitation of the water created from the automatic valve is not enough to disturb or remove the larvae.

It is being recommended that these large open tanks be drained and cleaned every third day to break the "egg to hatch" cycle of the mosquito. This can be cumbersome, time consuming, and a waste of water. However, there are some good alternatives to large open stock tanks that will greatly reduce to eliminate mosquito breeding in your horse's source of water.

The first choice is an automatic waterer where the surface of the water is completely covered at all times so the mosquitoes cannot lay their eggs. These waterers have a ball or elliptical float that the horse pushes down to get to the water. The elliptical float tends to work much better for horses since they are designed to take little pressure to move, only has to be moved a small distance, and does not jump back at the horse as the ball does.

These waterers are made of tough polyethyleen plastic that can withstand a lot of abuse and because of the slick surface are very easy to clean. They tend to be well insulated and in most cases when installed to the manufacturer's recommendations, will work throughout the winter without any other source of heat.

In the summer they will keep the water cooler and reduce or eliminate any algae growth that is typically seen in the large open stock tanks.

When looking at this type of automatic waterer remember, you get what you pay for.

There are some cheap waterers of this type on the market that tend to be poorly constructed, have little insulation, and are not sealed so the insulation becomes saturated with water and loses it's insulation properties. Also, the plastic tends to be thin and will not stand up to this type of environment.

The better automatic waterers of this type are more expensive than an open stock tank, but in comparison to a lost horse, it is a good investment.

The second alternative is to install an open surface, automatic waterer that has very shallow water and a quick fill valve. In this case the shallower the better as long as the valve can replenish the water quickly. These waterers will hold as little as two gallons at a time and can water up to 40 horses.

They are constructed out of plastic, stainless steel, or a combination of both. They are easy to clean and because of the shallow water and the agitation caused by the high fill valve; it is difficult for the mosquitoes to use this as a breeding area.

County West Nile Virus Grants For 2003 Issued

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) Acting Secretary Kathleen A. McGinty recently announced more than $6.5 million in grants to counties for mosquito surveillance and control as part of Pennsylvania's battle against the West Nile virus in 2003.

"Counties are invaluable partners in our fight against West Nile virus. It is this strong working relationship that has kept the West Nile outbreak less severe in Pennsylvania than in most other states," said Acting Secretary McGinty. "We are confident our grants will again provide county West Nile officials with the resources they need to identify areas where large numbers of mosquito larvae are located, and where spraying is needed, so we can get a good start on this year's effort."

Last year, as West Nile virus spread across the country, the virus was identified in all but four Pennsylvania counties. Fifty-nine people contracted the virus, and eight died because of it.

"Last year's outbreak makes it clear we need to continue our aggressive and proactive program to reduce the mosquito population in Pennsylvania. Over the past three years, our DEP and county officials have refined and targeted their mosquito surveillance and control efforts to make the best use of our financial and technical resources, and we will do that again in 2003," McGinty said.

"Despite the 59 human cases, and tragically, the eight deaths, Pennsylvania's citizens faced fewer cases of the disease than people in most states, in large part due to the aggressive and well targeted mosquito surveillance and control effort run by our DEP staff and their county colleagues."

West Nile virus is transmitted by mosquitoes from infected birds to people and other birds. Most people bitten by an infected mosquito will never get sick, and most who do get sick will experience only flu like symptoms.

However, a very small percentage of people bitten by an infected mosquito will develop West Nile encephalitis, an infection that can cause an inflammation of the brain. Cases of West Nile have occurred in Pennsylvania primarily from mid-summer through early fall.

Although hot summer days seem far away now, county West Nile teams will be starting surveillance for larvae in early April, when the larvae begin to hatch. Despite a tight state budget, Acting Secretary McGinty said DEP is proposing that 63 of the state's 67 counties receive at least as much funding for their West Nile program as they spent during 2002.

Susquehanna and Cambria Counties are contracting for some services on their own, and will therefore need less state money. Delaware County spent much more than anticipated on mosquito control during the fourth quarter of 2002.

Philadelphia purchased mosquito control products in the fourth quarter of 2002 for use during 2003, so the funding need for this year will be lower.

The funding for counties can only be guaranteed through the current state budget, which runs through June 30. Funding proposed for counties for July 1 through December 31 will be finalized when the 2003-2004 state budget is passed by the legislature and signed by the governor.

USDA Issues Conditional License For West Nile Virus Vaccine For Horses

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The U.S. Department of Agriculture announced in August of 2002 that it has issued a conditional license to Fort Dodge Laboratories, Inc., of Fort Dodge, Iowa, a division of American Home Products, Inc. for a vaccine intended to aid in the prevention of disease in horses caused by West Nile virus.

USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service issues conditional licenses for veterinary biologics products to meet an emergency situation, limited market, local situation, or special circumstance. The special circumstance addressed here is the need for a product to aid in the prevention of disease caused by West Nile virus.

Under these regulations, a product that is shown to be pure and safe and demonstrates a reasonable expectation of efficacy may be licensed while data to establish efficacy and potency are still being obtained.

Conditional licenses are generally issued with restrictions and for a limited period of time. At the end of the conditional license period, data obtained in support of the product's efficacy, potency, and product performance are evaluated to determine if the conditional license should be renewed or if a regular product license may be issued.

In keeping with these regulations, the product described above has been issued a conditional license for one year. The product is restricted to use by a veterinarian in those states where use of the product has been approved by the appropriate state regulatory authorities.

Horse owners planning to ship their animals to other countries should be aware that vaccinated animals may not meet the import requirements of those countries due to the presence of certain antibodies in their blood. While the presence of this antibody is not permanent, it could lead to complications in shipping the horse.

Devon Horse Show Announces Event Dates

DEVON (Chester Co.) — Pony jumpers, an exciting addition to the Devon Horse Show and Country Fair, will compete for the first time ever in the Dixon Oval on Sunday afternoon, May 25.

Three unique exhibitions plus jumper classes featuring the top riders in the country, some of whom will represent our country in the Pan American Games this summer, will be a part of the upcoming event.

In addition, hunters, saddlebreds, hackney and harness ponies, and four-in-hand coaches will compete.

The ticket office for Devon opens Wednesday, April 2, and is open Monday, Wednesday and Friday, 10 a.m.-3 p.m.

Devon runs May 22-31 and benefits Bryn Mawr Hospital.

Carriage racing, seen for the first time ever in this country at Devon two years ago, was so popular that it returns again this year with four pairs competing on the final Friday and Saturday, May 30 and 31.

Carriage racing is an offshoot of combined driving, in which drivers compete over a simulated cross country course in a ring.

New to Devon this year is an exhibition of vaulting, a discipline included in the World Equestrian Games.

The Friendship Vaulting Team will perform Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, May 24, 25, and 26.

In a combination of barrel racing and show jumping, teams including one rider from each discipline will compete in exhibition during the week.

First a Western rider will race around a course of barrels, then a show jumping rider will jump a course of fences set beside the barrels. The two team members' times are added together for their score.

Laura Chapot of Neshanic Station, N.J., will return to the Devon Horse Show to defend her 2002 Open Jumper Championship.

The Carriage Pleasure Drive on Sunday, May 25, assembles at St. David's Church, after which the carriages travel over the roads leading to Devon, with final judging in the Dixon Oval at 2 p.m.

Competition will be stiff in the jumper classes, featured during evening sessions Sunday through Thursday, with the $75,000 Devon Grand Prix on Thursday evening. Jumpers conclude the evening sessions Friday and Saturday. Saturday features the $35,000 Idle Dice Stake.

Among those expected to compete are McLain Ward of Bedford, N.Y., Devon Leading Rider title for the past four years, Laura Chapot of Neshanic Station, N.J., who has won the Open Jumper Championship twice in the last three years, and such international stars as Lauren Hough of Wellington, Fla., Chris Kappler of Pittstown, N.J., Anne Kursinski of Frenchtown, N.J., and Leslie Howard of Fairfield, Conn.

Three and five-gaited, hackney and harness classes as well as four-in-hand coaching are competed nightly, with side saddle classes on Wednesday, May 28 and Hunter Breeding classes on Thursday, May 29.

The Country Fair includes boutique shopping daily, with jewelry, fine art, sporting clothes, and much more.

General admission is $6 for adults, $3 for children under 12, and $4 for seniors over 65. Reserved seating is available. Call for ticket prices. Tickets may be purchased in advance at the ticket office at the show grounds or call (610) 688-2554.

Getting To Devon

horses, working full-time on her family's Lodestone Farm hunter/jumper operation.

"All I remember as a kid was wanting to stay home and ride. I couldn't wait to get off of the bus, and I would look forward to what horse show we were going to compete in that weekend," she said. "I never sat in the house and thought, 'do I really want to ride today?' It was always a given."

Riding since she was three years old, Jocelyn began competing in the show ring at age four, and by age 11 had made her debut into the ring at Devon in the medium pony hunter class.

She plans to compete at the upcoming Devon Horse Show and Country Fair, May 22-31. The ring is familiar to her, as she, along with her father, John, and mother, Leslie, has participated in the event for many years. The family owns and operates Lodestone Farm, Denver.

Jocelyn has participated in the pony divisions, local division, green hunters, working hunters, junior hunters, and has been champion and reserve at the event. She has shown horses for Lodestone Farm and for other professionals from across the U.S.

"Devon," as it is more familiarly called, is one of four annual horse shows in which a horse must be qualified to enter. Exhibitors and their horses come from all over the country for the event.

The slogan, "Where the Champions Meet," highlights the prestige of the event.

The horses must prove themselves by wining consistently at A rated horse shows throughout the year.

The Devon Horse Show then selects the horses with the greatest number of points from the horse's best 15 shows of the year before the show issues an invitation to compete.

Typically, of the 15 horse shows submitted to Devon, the horses will be champion or reserve almost every time.

The Road To Devon

"Getting to Devon takes years of preparation," said John Martin. Spectators watch riders at Devon and "don't really know what people have done to get there," he said.

One of the first considerations is the purchase of a quality mount. Devon horse owners "have looked long and hard for a quality horse," said Jocelyn.

"It's a long process, not only for the rider but also for the horse," Martin said. "You can't take just any horse and say, 'I'm going to make this horse qualify for Devon.'"

Besides purchasing a quality horse, training at a top-notch show barn to get valuable instruction for the rider and the horse is imperative, he said.

Finding a good instruction requires "going to horse shows, seeing who's winning and who has more of a professional attitude," she said.

"It's not something that you can work on for a few months and then go to Devon," Martin said. "That's like saying 'we're going to do batting practice this month and hopefully get to the World Series.'"

Training for this equine World Series, then, begins with two days of schooling over jumps, besides 2-3 sessions of doing flat work — walking, trotting, cantering, and doing various exercises, such as figure eights, small and large circles, and flying lead changes.

"It's not something that you or your horse learns in a week or a month," he said.

Training, however, is a balance between doing enough work to be ready and "yet not so much that the horses get muscle sore or foot sore. If a horse gets sore, we give them time off," Martin said.

Owners hoping to get to Devon put in time not only practicing at home but "there is a commitment of time at horse shows, too, to get enough points to qualify," he said.

The points go with the horse — the owner does not necessarily have to ride the horse to the qualifying wins.

"Most of the horses and ponies that get to Devon are on a fairly rigid show schedule," said Martin. "If they are planning to show 30 times, they need to try to win 50 percent of the time at least."

"The first pony I took to Devon (her own "Bit of Chance," which was second in the country in the medium ponies that year) was a very successful pony. I probably showed it 35-40 times a year on the weekends," said Jocelyn.

Spring 2003 Horse Industry Handbook Update Available

CREAMERY (Montgomery Co.) — The American Youth Horse Council is pleased to announce the publication and availability of the new Spring 2003 Update for the Horse Industry Handbook.

This update marks the third since the Horse Industry Handbook was introduced in 1994. The Horse Industry Handbook is an encyclopedic volume on equine care and management written and reviewed by over 200 equine experts containing over 400 fact-filled pages in an updateable ring binder format.

Is used extensively as a reference for youth competitions and is a valuable addition to the equine library of all horse owners. Nancy Kadwill, Montgomery County Extension Agent and member of the Board of the AMYC, highly recommends the book as a resource for current and potential horse owners.

The concept behind the Horse Industry Handbook is for national experts to continually refine and keep current the information contained in the Horse Industry Handbook. All the books sold after the release of an update have the most recent update, and any previous updates incorporated. Since its first release in 1994, the Horse Industry Handbook has had three updates, Fall 1995, Spring 1999, and now, Spring 2003.

The Horse Industry Handbook Update Spring 2003 is in stock and ready for those of you with Horse Industry Handbooks purchased before February 2003.

The update includes five articles:

- Bandaging the Equine Limb
- Common Feet and Leg Problems of the Horse
- Equine Salmonellosis
- The Renewable Resource: Horse Manure
- West Nile Virus in Horses.

Getting To Devon

horses in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and New Jersey.

Horses that work hard on the weekend get a rest during the week.

"Most horses don't necessarily do a whole lot of work throughout the week. They need down time," he said. These horses generally take the first two days of the week off work and turned out to pasture. Later in the week they may do light workouts on the lunge line or under the saddle.

"Horses that show are very fit — once they're fit like that they don't have to work during the week," he said. "Devon horses are the athletes of the horse world."

The Riders' Responsibility

Riders in the hunter competitions are allowed to get into the ring in the early morning however are not allowed to jump the course, he said.

A diagram is posted at the in gate. However, when the horses enter the ring, "they are walking in with no practice on that course," he said. "Everybody's on the same level playing field."

Besides the course of the jumps, the diagram includes the distance between the jumps. Since hunters are judged on their even stride and style between and over jumps, riders have to know how the horse will cover that distance, he said, to best show off the horse's jumping ability.

"Depending on how big your horse's stride is would determine how you need to ride down the line," said Jocelyn.

Riders may "need to coax their horses if they think their mounts will back off, look at the spectators, and look at the jumps," she said.

"As a rider, you need to be able to feel that, and keep coaxing them and telling them, 'you can do this.'"

Relying on feel, and an eye for a distance, is imperative as riders judge whether to move up a bit or be quiet and wait it out, "and all that relies on what you call a good eye," said Jocelyn.

Although the festive atmosphere can be intimidating, "the fair is fun, once we're past the pressure of the horse show," said Jocelyn.

Horses and riders have to be able to get past the distractions "and go do their thing, no matter what — to shut out anything and go do their job," he said.

"To win at Devon, takes a great ride, a great horse, and everything coming together at the right moment. It's hard to win because every horse has earned the right to be there — only the good ones make it. The courses are hard and the lines are long. They do everything they can to test you."

Jocelyn Martin

Catch Riding

Most of Jocelyn's riding instruction came from her father, John, who grew up on a hunter/jumper horse farm in nearby Lititz and also exhibited horses. Her mother, Leslie, also helped her learn how to ride.

Jocelyn began "catch riding" — riding horses for other owners — at an early age. By the time she was 14 she found herself riding for many different owners, which served to make her comfortable on a wide variety of mounts.

"First of all, I love to ride, and every time I get on a horse, whether it's a green horse or a horse that's been around for a while and just needs a tune-up, I want to ride to the best of my ability," she said.

"At the end of the day, we (Jocelyn and her father) discuss how each horse was, how I rode each horse, and what we can do to better the horse and better the ride," she said.

Sitting atop a horse gives a unique perspective, according to Jocelyn, who gets different readings from each mount, whether it is tense, fresh, overwhelmed, or intimidated.

"You are dealing with a second personality with the horse," said John Martin. "There are large differences from horse to horse, and a professional's job is to be able to get the maximum out of all different types."

"You can't overreact," so no one notices that the horse is nervous, she said.

Jocelyn works to disguise the faults of horses by sitting quietly, using subtle motions, and not making any quick or exaggerated movements to relax the horse.

"You can't be too rough with your hands or pulling on the reins. You can't be sitting up there, flopping around, and letting your seat bump around or your legs flopping around.

"The rider needs to be able to trust what she's sitting on, and the horse needs to trust the rider," she said.

"Once the horse feels that the rider is going to do a good job and not make mistakes," said Martin, it will settle in to do a better job on the course.

Lodestone Farm boards 25-30 horses, most of them hunters and jumpers in training. Jocelyn does the majority of the riding, working eight or more horses a day. She not only starts young horses but also works with horses at each stage of development.

The Martins work with children and adults of all ability levels, taking riders to A rated and local shows.

The 34-acre farm also includes a heated barn with 34 stalls, a tack room, office, and lounge, plus an indoor arena with a viewing lounge. The operation also has an outdoor ring, numerous fields for turnout, riding trails, and a small tack store which the Martins renovated into a home for Jocelyn.

Martin has been competing in the show ring since she was four years old. In this 1991 picture she competes with her own Silver Hill at Harrisburg's Pennsylvania National Horse Show. In "Teddy's" first year of showing he qualified to go to all the major horse shows. Additionally, he won a class at Devon after only five months of showing. He has retired to the farm but still enters the show ring with some of the children who take lessons and ride at Lodestone Farm.
